Five Detachments Level All Resistance in Sweep to Sea.

By the Associated Press.

With the Spanish insurgents in Eastern Spain (Tuesday), March 29.—Spanish insurgents early today laid siege to Lerida, Catalonian electric power center and key city to Barcelona, seaport capital of government Spain.

The insurgent command declared previous reports were erroneous that Lerida had been surrendered by its government defenders.

Siege was started by insurgent infantry and artillery which crossed the Cinca River on pontoon bridges and quickly went into action.

Six Columns Advance.

Hendaye, France, March 28 (U.P.).—Lerida, base of Spanish loyalist resistance in Catalonia, was reported to have been abandoned tonight to the insurgents driving upon Barcelona and the Mediterranean seacoast.

Unofficial reports from Barcelona, the loyalist provisional capital only 84 miles from Gen. Franco's armies, said Lerida's evacuation began late in the afternoon.

Evacuation of the city was said to have been ordered by the loyalist commander in chief, Gen. Sebastian Pozas.

Barbastro Falls.

Another loyalist stronghold, the Aragon city of Barbastro, 33 miles east of Hues and 50 miles northwest of Lerida, fell to Franco's Navarrese cavalry and Galician brigades tonight in a huge flanking operation.

Franco's Saragossa headquarters said Barbastro was afire by fleeing loyalists who had held it since the outbreak of the war 21 months ago and who used it as their base for the sieges of Huesca and Jaca and offensives against Saragossa and Belchite.

Bombing squadrons aided insurgent troops that drove upon Barbastro from the north and west.

Gen. Juan Moscardo's insurgent troops, entering Barbastro after seizing a half dozen nearby towns, reported "a spectacle of ruin recalling Guernica."

Columns Converge.

(Guernica, holy city of the Spanish Basques, was destroyed last year in the fighting near Bilbao on the Bay of Biscay. The loyalists charged that German bombers and German pilots destroyed the town with a loss of 800 civilian lives. The insurgents said it was razed by retreating loyalists.)

The insurgents struck across Catalonia upon Lerida from two directions. One column under Gen. Juan Yague moved along the Fraga-Lerida highway after wiping out loyalist resistance at Fraga, the "Gateway to Catalonia" on the Cinca River 15 miles west of Lerida.

Another column of Moors from Africa, Italian Blackshirts and Spanish Legionnaires struck simultaneously from Masalcorreig on the southwest, quickly covering a 12-mile stretch along the Serge River Valley.

Farther north and farther south along the weaving 130-mile front marked by Catalonia's boundary

Col. House Dies; Most Trusted Aide of Wilson

Veteran Statesman Was 79; Simple Funeral Is Planned.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 28.—Col. Edward Mandell House, a gray, silent little Texan who once was one of the world's most mysteriously powerful forces as the closest confidant of Woodrow Wilson, died today.

His death came at 79 after a long illness in the quiet old town house here to which he had retired in sorrow after his break with Wilson, which ended a friendship without parallel in American politics.

Shy all his life despite his custody of as many great state secrets of the World War period as any President, minister or king, House said many times that he wanted no "fuss and feathers" when he was gone.

His family made clear that his wishes would be followed. There will be no services here. The body will be taken to Houston, Col. House's birthplace.

His wife, the former Lucille Hunter, of Austin, Tex., had known for weeks that his death was but a matter of time. She was with him

Greenbelt Forces Widow to Move as Not 'Low Income'

The widowed mother of a 5-year-old daughter will move from the Government' model community of Greenbelt, Md., April 1 because her earnings and those of the sister who lives with her put them out of th Department of Agriculture's idea of the low-income class.

When Mrs. Louise W. Endsley first moved to Greenbelt she lived alone with her child in a one-bedroom house. Shortly, however, a sister, Charlotte D. Whittington, with whom she works in the Federal Alcohol Control Administration, went to live with her. Their combinded salaries were in the neighborhood of $3,000. But the Agriculture Department had ruled that $1,800 was as much as three persons could earn and still be classified as "low income" and remain at Greenbelt.

Greenbelt Manager Roy C. Braden explained last night that Mrs. Endsley had not been "asked to leave," but pointed out a clause in Greenbelt leases prohibits tenants from taking roomers. He said the sister would be classed as a roomer.

Mrs. Endsley, first victim of the Government's edict that Greenbelt shall be for low-income families only, had signed a year's lease.

1,100 'Bombs' Provide Joy For an Hour

40-Foot Cherry Tree in Lights Tops Off Display Finale.

More than 65,000 persons girdled the Tidal Basin in a continuous line last night while for more than an hour rockets lighted the sky in tribute to Washington's cherry blossoms.

Long before the first rocket flashed up, the crowds were gathering around the Tidal Basin. Up the east wall from Fourteenth street to the bicycle stand they lined the railing until hardly a vacant space remained at the ringside.

In places the crowds jammed up to a depth of a dozen ranks, while a few adventurous youngsters climbed trees. From parked cars around Tidal Basin drive other thousands peered past the cherry trees at the flames in the sky.

A single burst opened the show, while the explosion drowned out a murmer of applause that rose in the crowd.

Other single explosions threw great flaming flowers, while at the far end of the basin the crowds tensed, waiting for the explosions. Then six streamers went up together, lighting up the ring of faces.

Some of the rockets brought laughs from the crowds with wavering lights that criss-crossed each other on the way down. Others brought murmurs of disappointment when the hanging lights burnt out before they fell in the water. But there was no disappointment with the finale, ushered in by a gigantic bombardment and topped off with a 40-foot cherry tree in lights.

Nearly 500 "bombs" went into the finale, while during the entire show more than 1,100 were used.

Officials of National Capital Parks predicted that the blossoms will

House Passes Bill to Forbid Policy Racket

Notables Urge Legalizing Race Track in D. C. at Hearing.

By James D. Secrest.

The House yesterday struck a blow at the District numbers game, which reputedly reaps a daily fortune in pennies from thousands of Washington's lowest wage earners, while prominent Washingtonians pleaded before a sub-committee for legalizing of horse racing and parimutuel betting.

Over the opposition of Chairman Palmisano, of the House District Committee, the House passed a bill which strengthens local gambling laws by authorizing:

Arrests for possession of copies or records of policy slips.

Raids of suspected gambling houses on search warrants issued on information and belief.

Destruction of gambling devices and property seized in raids where no arrests are made.

The bill now goes to the Senate for action on a few House amendments, suggested by U. S. Attorney David A. Pine. Chairman King, of the Senate District Committee, said

Germany to Try Schuschnigg; Hitler Accuses Him of Treason

'Hang Him!' Crowd Cries to Fuehrer; Court 'Show' Expected.

By the United Press.

Vienna, March 28.—Austria's last chancellor, Kurt Schuschnigg, will be tried by the German government possibly on charges of high treason against the Reich, punishable by death on the chopping block, it was reported tonight.

(In Berlin tonight, speaking to 18,000 at the sports palace, Fuehrer Adolf Hitler termed Schuschnigg's actions "treason." Hitler's speech was punctuated by shouts from the crowd "Hang Schuschnigg!")

It was believed the trial would be held in Leipzig this summer, be public, and purposely widely publicized since substantiation of charges brought against Schuschnigg of both Hitler and Field Marshall Hermann Goering would tend to silence critics of Germany's annexation of Austria.

Goering speaking in Vienna on Saturday announced briefly that

U. S. Slashes Silver Price; Peso Slumps

Mexico Feels Pressure in Move Seen as Oil Seizure Rebuke.

Other World Monetary Markets Tremble at 1-Cent Reduction.

By Franklyn Waltman.

Reduction of the Treasury's offering price for world silver by 1 cent per ounce, preceded Sunday night by announcement of cessation of purchases of the white metal from Mexico, yesterday sent tremors through the metal and monetary markets of several nations.

The action of the Treasury in reducing its offering price for world silver from 45 cents—which had been in effect since January 20, 1936—to 44 cents was not explained. But it was regarded as another stroke at the Mexican government in retaliation for its expropriation of American oil wells in that country.

Whether the Treasury's offering price for world silver—posted each day in New York—may be further reduced could not be learned. Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morganthau was still out of the city and Herbert Gaston, his assistant, said he could only refer to the Secretary's statement of some months ago that the Treasury in regard to silver was on "a 24-hour basis."

Secretary of State Cordell Hull declined to discuss the silver moves, except to make it clear—after some confusion earlier in the day—that the Treasury's action in deferring continuance of purchases of Mexican silver was "the decision of the government of the United States."

Meanwhile, Secretary Hull was closeted for some time with a group of oil executives regarding the Mexican government's expropriation of American oil properties valued at more than $400,000,000. Hull said no conclusions or decisions were reached during the meeting.

He said he and the oil executives engaged in a general discussion of the situation and an exchange of information regarding various phases of the problem. Part of the discussion was devoted, he said, to a clarification of contentions presented in a 3,000-page brief filed by the oil men with the State Department last week. Study of this brief would continue, he said, adding that it was no easy task to digest 3,000 pages of a brief in a short period.

The oil executives were Walter Teagle, chairman of the board of the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey; W. S. Farish, president of that company; Eugene Holman, president of the Huastega Petroleum Co., a Standard Oil subsidiary; Judge Frank Feuille, representing the Standard Oil Co. of California; Al-

'Gag Artist' Quits Society as 'Daub' Panics the Experts

Springfield, Mass., March 28 (U.P.).—His painting was a "joke," Henry Jesse Billings said today as he quit the Springfield Art League, whose judges had acclaimed it a modern masterpiece.

"I was determined to cast aside all rules and blob an old canvas for submission to the league's gallery exhibition last month," Billings said. He was disgusted with the "policy of league juries in rejecting the work of well-known artists and accepting that of apparently incompetent amateurs."

Billings explained he had taken an old marine canvas and scraped part of it. After turning it upside down, he used water reflections as a headdress for one of three figures in his "Those Who Weep." It won the prize.

Reorganization Voted By Senate, But Error Returns Bill to House

Rules Committee Scores Extension of Study to Utilities' Activity.

By Sidney Olson.

Conservative Democratic members of the House Rules Committee—the same bloc that stifled the wage-hour bill for many months last year—yesterday balked at a provision in the Norris TVA investigation resolution requiring Congressional study of the "manner in which the utilities have impeded or harassed" the work of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

House leaders had predicted that the Rules Committee would grant yesterday a favorable rule to one of the numerous resolutions seeking Congressional investigation of TVA, thus permitting the resolution to reach the floor today for quick passage.

O'Connor Finds Fault.

Rules Committee members, however, joined Republican Leader Bertrand H. Snell, of New York, and Representative Andrew May (Democrat), of Kentucky, avowed friend of the utilities, in expressing dissatisfaction with the section which strikes at legal methods used by the utilities in blocking TVA activities.

Chairman John O'Connor (Democrat), of New York, repeatedly found fault with the Norris resolution as well as with the other resolutions, and appeared to favor a simple blanket resolution merely authorizing an investigation of the TVA.

Representative Maury Maverick (Democrat), of Texas, sponsor of three TVA investigation resolutions, told the committee that the proposed inquiry is "the most important Congressional investigation since the Teapot Dome scandal." He noted, however, that the circumstances are different, and added:

Wants Partisan Quiz.

"The New Deal should not be afraid of an investigation.

"The self-respect and integrity of the Democratic Party are at stake in the matter.

"Personally, I would welcome the appointment of partisans to this investigating committee. I think we have been waiting too long for word from the White House or Senate as to how shall we proceed. I seem to find out what I am going to do from the newspapers. How about

Gourmets Eat 2 Hours and Give Up, All Getting Sleepy.

By Scott Hart.

Kings of cookery and 66 gourmets dined last night in honor of A. Escoffier—the greater delight a gourmet ever had—and after two hours of Les Poitrines de Pintadons Truffees et farcies a la Jusserand and the like, pronounced Chef Claude F. Jarrin a man to perpetuate A. Escoffier's tradition and flattered him on putting 30 days on the preparation of this one triumphant meal.

"Do not disturb me; oh, oh; the whole thing relys on me; I cannot wait; I must not delay," panted Jarrin to news photographers as he hurried from the dining room to the kitchen before the gourmiers arrived.

Then the gourmets, solemn men, entered the Queen Elizabeth room of the Raleigh Hotel for the first dinner of Les Amis d'Escoffier (friends of Escoffier) ever held in Washington. Each walked in, knowing the rules.

Here was a society which knew food, founded two years ago, nationally, upon the death of the great French chef, Escoffier, to honor his memory and culinary creations. None smoked upon entering the dining hall; all knew that water was not available. "A person who smokes while eating does not deserve the title of 'gourmet'," says the rules plainly. A person who drinks water destroys his fine faculties of taste.

And though a man might go to a small room, adjoining the Queen Elizabeth, for an aperitif why that, indeed, is to lift one. The rules say so plainly. But "persons under the influence of liquor will not be permitted to sit at the table." The rules say so.

Each gourmet down, adjusting himself in the chair, like men with both pleasant and serious prospect; each performs the Le Serviette au Cou, sticks a napkin in his collar. The napkins spread across the fronts of the

Holding Company Mail Law Is Upheld by Supreme Court

In a test of two pillar provisions of the public utilities holding company act, the Supreme Court yesterday ruled, 6 to 1, that the Government can prohibit the use of the mails to companies which fail to register with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The decision left "death sentence" provisions of the act undetermined, but settled once and for all the 2½-year battle in the courts over utility holding company registrations and penalties.

Chief Justice Hughes and five associates overruled contentions of the Electric Bond & Share Co. and 14 associated public utility concerns and sustained the registration suit of the Securities and Exchange Commission. The lone dissenting vote was cast by Justice McReynolds. Justices Cardozo and Reed did not participate.

Immediate apprehensions of utility concerns, which have operated without registration since 1935 under a Justice Department-SEC "truce," were eased by an SEC statement indicating no present intention to "crack down."

The SEC, in effect, invited the utility industry to voluntarily simplify their corporate structures to carry out objectives of the act for limitation of holding companies into geographically integrated systems.

"The commission conceives it to be its duty under the fact to allow the industry a reasonable time in which to effectuate such voluntary plans, and the commission will continue to co-operate in every reasonable way with the efforts of the industry to bring itself within the terms and spirit of the act," said the SEC statement.

The commission expressed "gratification at the favorable decision tempered by a realization of the heavy responsibility placed upon us and of the gravity of our obligation."

"The way now lies clear," it said, "toward completing the program of regulation and toward perfecting the orderly and economical administrative methods which are provided by the act and which have been de-

Parliamentary Mistake by Byrnes Reroutes Act After Passage.

Filibuster Threat Defeats Leaders

48-to-43 Ballot Blocks Chance of Death Kiss in Committee.

(Picture on Uage 8.)

By Robert C. Albright.

The Senate yesterday passed the Administration's Government reorganization bill by a 49 to 42 vote, but a parliamentary quirk rerouted the measure back to the House for another showdown struggle.

Passage came a few minutes after the Senate refused, 48 to 43, to send the sweeping departmental bill back to committee for modification and a probable death kiss.

The sweeping victory wrested from the Senate by Senator James F. Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, bill manager, was marred at the last minute by a slip that raised another legislative hurdle in the path of enactment.

Oversight Blocks Plans.

Plans to send the bill immediately to conference without further House action were blocked by an oversight in a unanimous consent agreement reached last week. The agreement ordered a vote on passage, after the recommittal test, without intervening business. When Byrnes moved to call up a House bill and substitute Senate provisions for it, he was stopped by a point of order.

Byrnes made an effort after passage to retrieve his loss, but opponents of the bill began a short-lived filibuster and threatened to inject the anti-lynching issue as a rider. In the end Byrnes withdrew and permitted the bill to go back to the House for action.

Chairman John J. Cochran of the House Reorganization Committee, called a meeting of his group for this morning to agree on a course of action. Expectation is that the committee will substitute its own recommendations for the Senate bill and bring it into the House for a vote.

May Pool Proposals.

The House already has acted on two phases of the far-reaching reorganization program—merger powers for the President, and six new White House assistants. It has never passed on proposed Civil Service reform and revamping of the general accounting system, but has separate bills pending on both. The committee may decide this morning to pool all of the proposals, including those already passed by the House, and substitute them in the House for the Senate bill.

Chairman John J. O'Connor of the House Rules Committee explained the bills will have privileged status and will not need a special rule from his group. At the same time he bitterly opposed any action on the bill at this time and recommended that the Cochran committee "let the bill peacefully slumber in some cobwebbed pigeon hole."

Job Problem Put First.

"Our people are in no frame of mind at the present moment for the reception of this procedural gesture," said the House rules chairman. "After the unemployment situation is solved and business is reassured, there will be plenty of time for this house-cleaning. Get the fire out and then clean house. Psychologically, the bill should be permitted to requiescat in pace."

Senate approval came in the face of the greatest outpourings of mail and wire protests since the court

Alabaman Asks 90% U. S. Cut In Immigration

'Political Asylum' Proposal Scored; Deportation of Criminals Urged.

Denouncing efforts to make the United States into a "political asylum," Representative Joe Starnes (Democrat), of Alabama, urged drastic tightening of American immigration laws last night at a forum of the Democratic Women's National Council.

"America could afford to be a political refuge when it was a trackless wilderness," Starnes declared, but added that non-citizens of the present day "have no right to preach alien doctrines and alien social and economic philosophies."

Starnes said he thought "American citizens are entitled to express any form of belief they want—but not foreign residents of America."

Advocating a 90 per cent reduction in immigration quotas "until we absorb our present foreign stock population," Starnes recommended passage of legislation now before Congress providing for deportation of any alien on relief six months or more, or guilty of gangsterism, moral turpitude, violation of State narcotic laws or espionage, or whose presence is declared "inimical to the public interest of the United States."

Starnes declare dthat even though present immigration quotas are not being filled, "the Department of State in the last five years has denied visas to 1,000,000 applicants, on the ground that they would become public charges."

The meeting, held at 1500 Rhode Island avenue northwest, was presided over by Mrs. Marion Ramsay. Mrs. Harry Dodderidge is president of the organization.

D. C. Woman Wins $1,126 by British Statute of 1705

Relying on a statute enacted under English Queen Anne, in 1705, Miss Margaret F. French, half owner of premises at 623 Upshur street northwest, yesterday in District Court was given $1,126.25 as her share of rentals accruing through leasing a portion of the premises.

Miss French, who occupies the lower floor, sued the guardian of her brother's estate, who had been leasing the upper floor of the house and retaining rents for the estate. Brother and sister were equal owners of the property.

The statute, presented by Daniel B. Maher, her attorney, never construed by District courts before, is a holdover from days when the common law of England was the law of the District.

Newly-Found House Conservatism Faces Test as Reorganization Bill, Skillfully Shepherded by Byrnes, Is Squeezed Through Senate.

By Franklyn Waltman

In the early years of the New Deal the House of Representatives functioned so unfailingly as a legislative rubber stamp for the President that it is a little difficult to become accustomed to that branch of Congress showing independence. Nevertheless in the last year it has shown more independence of the Executive than the Senate, albeit that fact has received little publicity or notice.

WALTMAN.

Indeed, there are members of the House who now proudly contend that the House is more conservative than the Senate, and they cite abundant evidence to show the Administration knows this, even if the public does not. The conclusive test of that contention, however, will come on the House's action on the reorganization bill. If the House is more conservative than the Senate that measure is doomed, certainly in its present objectionable form.

The Senate defeated a motion to recommit the reorganization bill—which would have laid it on the shelf at least for another year—by the narrow vote of 48 to 43. If only three members who opposed recommittal had voted in the affirmative the bill would have been shelved. That is a margin of victory that can give little joy to the President and his Administration leaders.

What is more, it is a margin of victory so small that it will be turned into defeat if it is true, as contended, that the House is the more conservative body. For the narrow escape of the measure in the Senate under such circumstances means in the House a margin of defeat.

The closeness of that Senate vote, when viewed in perspective, is truly an amazing thing. It is no secret that the Administration brought all of its great resources to bear in behalf of the bill. Promises quietly were made that this or that bureau would not be touched. Senators up for reelection had held over them threats of White House opposition. The fact that several Governors lobbied with their Senators for the bill leads to the belief that New Deal relief funds were being used to bring pressure. One Senator openly declared his vote was solicited by officials of one community who said they wished to be assured of relief money.

Aside from the use of patronage, relief funds and all the accouterments of a great and powerful political machine, the Administration was fortunate in having Senator James F. Byrnes, of South Carolina, as the pilot for this legislation. Until Senator Byrnes, at the end of his battle, was outwitted in a parliamentary maneuver by the shrewd Senator Bennett C. Clark, he gave one of the finest demonstrations of leadership in a legislative body that has been seen in these parts for a decade or more.

It is doubtful whether any man in the Senate other than Senator Byrnes—despite all the pressure—could have piloted the reorganization bill to a successful vote. He used all the personal charm which has made him a beloved figure on Capitol Hill to bring wavering or recalcitrant Senators into line. He argued with a plausibility and adroit ingeniousness that at times caused even stubborn opponents of the legislation to pause and re-examine their contentions.

Indeed, it is not a fanciful statement to assert that Senator Byrnes personally was responsible for holding behind the bill at least three Senators—the margin between defeat and victory. Those who are thrilled by skillful political performances regret he stubbed his toe at the end in his effort to sidetrack the House in consideration of this bill.

Yet despite pressure brought by the Administration, despite the skill and charm exerted by Senator Byrnes and despite the fact that 76 out of the 96 Senators are Democrats, this bill on which the Administration had set its heart escaped recommitment by a margin of only five votes.

The contention that the House is more conservative than the Senate is based on that body's rejection of the hours and wages bill after its passage by the Senate and an understanding that it would have defeated the Supreme Court reorganization bill of a year ago by a surprising margin. But those contentions are not conclusive. The wages and hours bill stirred sectional animosities. The House never recorded itself on the Supreme Court plan.

But we do know that the Administration feared to let the House vote first on the Supreme Court proposal. On the advice of the House leaders, the matter was brought first to the Senate floor after the difficulty of getting the House Judiciary Committee's approval for that legislation became apparent.

We know that the House has left on its calendar two of the most important sections of the reorganization bill—the civil service and the accounting and auditing parts. We also know, as Senator Byrnes demonstrated yesterday, that the Administration leaders did not desire to let the House consider the complete Senate bill on its merits but undertook to shunt it around that body by sending it direct to conference through a parliamentary maneuver. In that, however, they were defeated. Thus it is plain that the Administration has a greater fear of recalcitrancy in the House than in the Senate.

Perhaps it is a mistake in terminology to assert that the House is "more conservative" than the Senate. It might be more accurate to say that the House is "more responsive to political expediency" than the Senate, for that always has been true. Back in the days of Republican rule it was the House that stood against experimental undertakings. It was the Senate that then originated innovations. But in Mr. Roosevelt's first term the House took the lead in pressing forward experimental and unorthodox proposals—but then it was politically expedient to do so, as the results of all elections since 1932 have shown.

So, if the House has become more conservative—more standpat, if you please—than the Senate, it is a good indication that the country has become more conservative and standpat, for many House members know the trick of keeping both ears to the ground at once. House action on the reorganization bill should reveal the answer.

House Group, After 6 Weeks, Still at Sea on Wages, Hours

Ramspeck Sarcastically Sums Up Lack of Progress in Joke About Man Who Refused Ship Job Because He Feared a Wreck.

The position of the House Labor sub-committee, charged six weeks ago with the duty of drafting a wage-hour bill which will please a majority of the House, was summed up last night by Representative Robert Ramspeck (Democrat), Georgia, sub-committee chairman:

"Once there was a colored man who refused to board a ship, despite the fact it was the only job he could get. He stated his case:

"'Boy, when you is wrecked on land, there you is. When wou is wrecked at sea, where is you?'"

Although vaguely reporting progress for some time, the committee, after exhaustive sessions, apparently is no closer to a solution of the controversial question than at any time since the House administered a thwacking defeat to the Administration at the end of the special session last December by voting to recommit the measure to the Labor committee. President Roosevelt has consistently asked for the enactment of a wage-hour bill of some sort, making a fighting speech on the subject only last week in Gainesville, Ga.

But labor disagreement has militated against progress. In individual interviews last week the sub-committee obtained once more the views of William Green, president, American Federation of Labor, and John L. Lewis, chairman, Committee for Industrial Organization, but found the labor chieftains, as before, still in violent disagreement over such a bill's provisions.

26 Vessels Will Make Naval Reserve Cruises

The Navy Department yesterday announced tentative schedules for the annual Naval Reserve training cruises. Three battleships, the demilitarized dreadnaught Wyoming, 17 destroyers and 5 Naval Reserve training ships will make the voyages, naval officials said.

About 10,000 officers and men are expected to participate in the two-week cruises which begin in May and end in September. Foreign ports to be visited are Guantanamo, Cuba; Nassau, B. W. I.; Bermuda; Vera Cruz, Mexico, and Havana.

Finnan Is Lecturer On D. C. Playgrounds

Public recreation facilities of the District were analyzed last night by C. Marshall Finnan, superintendent of National Capital Parks, National Park Service, at Central High.

Finnan's lecture was the fourth on community relationships sponsored by the public night schools and public library.

Country Stronger Than Ever, Czech Premier Declares

Prague, March 28 (AP).—Premier Milan Hodza tonight assured his nation that "Czechoslovakia is stronger today than before the central European crisis" precipitated when Germany annexed Austria.

"There is no international danger, no danger of conflict," he said in a nation-wide broadcast to Czechoslovakians, apprehensive over German ambitions for Czech territory and the agitation of a large German minority for autonomy.

"The possibility of a friendly accord is indicated and Czechoslovakia is ready to do her share."

Hodza said he believed the time had come for creation of laws to guarantee the rights of minorities in Czechoslovakia.

Roosevelt Told Of 2 Victories; Elation Shown

President Signs Bills for Treasury, Postoffice Appropriations.

Warm Springs, Ga., March 28 (AP). News of two Administration victories—Senate passage of the Government reorganization bill and the Supreme Court ruling in favor of the public utility holding company act—reached President Roosevelt today and temporary White House officials were plainly elated.

The Chief Executive put in a varied day—the fifth of his current stay at his Pine Mountain cottage here.

He signed half a dozen bills, including the $1,409,967,198 appropriation for the Treasury and Postoffice departments. A total of $617,196,299 goes to the Treasury and $792,770,899 to the Postoffice for operating the two departments in the fiscal year beginning July 1.

Word of the death of Col. E. M. House in New York brought a formal tribute from the President, who said as one "who had long enjoyed the privilege of his friendship I shall miss his wise counsel and unvarying loyalty."

Mrs. Roosevelt, who arrived yesterday from Seattle, will go to Atlanta for a speech tomorrow before the Urban-Rural Women's Conference, returning here tomorrow night for the remainder of the President's stay.

Present plans call for a departure Saturday and arrival in Washington Sunday morning.

The President will spend 45 minutes Wednesday afternoon at Fort Benning, Ga., inspecting equipment and troops of the far-famed regular infantry schools.

House Exempts College Boxing

The House yesterday passed without debate a bill which permits colleges and universities to exempt their boxing exhibitions from control of the District Boxing Commission. The measure now goes to the Senate.

The legislation would save university athletic associations the expense of obtaining operators' licenses and licenses for each of their boxers, and of paying a tax of 5 per cent of their gross receipts to the commission.

Any college which wishes to have the protection of the commission, however, may remain under its jurisdiction.

2 in D. C. Area to Take Tests for Coast Guard

Vincent J. Castronove, 2809 North Capitol street, and Henry D. Wilson, 104 Hodges lane, Takoma Park, Md., were among the 27 candidates designated yesterday by Rear Admiral R. R. Waesche, commandant of the Coast Guard, to take the June examinations for admission to the Coast Guard Academy, New London, Conn.

On Capitol Hill

Gov. Richard W. Leche of Louisiana, and Mayor Robert S. Maestri of New Orleans headed a delegation from that State which yesterday urged a Senate Commerce subcommittee to approve a bill of Senator Overton (Democrat), Louisiana, for immediate construction of the Morganza floodway. Maestri also filed a brief asserting the Morganza construction would not jeopardize Mississippi interests.

Maj. Gen. Julian L. Schey, chief of army engineers, and Brig. Gen. H. B. Ferguson, president of the Mississippi River Commission, also testified. The hearing will be continued today.

The prediction that the Pettengill bill to repeal the long and short haul clause of the Interstate Commerce Act might result in a rate war between railroads and water carriers and have an adverse effect on employment in the transportation industries was made yesterday before a Senate Committee by Interstate Commerce Commissioner Joseph B. Eastman.

He questioned claims of the bill's supporters that it would increase railroad employment by permitting the roads to compete with water carriers on more equitable terms. "There is no evidence this bill will put an additional man to work," said Eastman.

Senator Berry (Democrat), Tennessee, introduced a bill yesterday to give the widows or other dependents of "G" men, Federal narcotic agents, coast guards, game wardens and other Federal law enforcement officers killed on duty, pensions and other death benefits.

The beneficiaries would receive $2,500 for funeral and other immediate expenses and $100 a month afterwards.

A bill giving the Reconstruction Finance Corporation blanket authority to make loans to any solvent private business, large or small, and to States and their subdivisions was introduced yesterday by Chairman Steagall (Democrat), of Alabama, of the House Banking Committee. A similar measure has been introduced in the Senate by Senator Glass (Democrat), of Virginia.

Steagall said he proposed the measure at the request of Chairman Jesse Jones, of the RFC, who estimated that organization had approximately $1,500,000,000 available to make loans as proposed in the bill.

The House Rivers and Harbors Committee approved a bill creating seven regional agencies to co-ordinate projects for conservation and development of resources. The measure is a revised draft of the Administration's regional planning bill.

President Roosevelt asked Congress to appropriate $15,500 so the United States might participate in the fourth international conference on private air laws next September at Brussels, Belgium. Fourteen representatives, mostly members of the House Naval Affairs Committee, will fly to Florida tomorrow to study plans for strengthening coast air defenses. They will return Sunday, making both journeys in Navy planes.

England to Halt Plane Saboteurs

London, March 28 (AP).—Scotland Yard tonight mapped an intensive drive against the stabs of saboteurs at Britain's vast rearmament program.

This followed the air ministry's disclosure that four high-speed bombing planes had been damaged, "apparently maliciously," in the Fairey Aviation Co.'s factory at Stockport.

It was reported secret service operatives masking as workmen would be sent into factories vital to rearmament in an effort to track down a possible ring of saboteurs.

Spanish Envoy to Attend War Play at Pierce Hall

Dr. Fernando de los Rios, Ambassador of Spain, will be in the audience at this evening's performance of "The Spanish Road," the "living newspaper" based on the Spanish conflict and shown here under the auspices of the Friends of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade. The play is being given at Pierce Hall, Fifteen and Harvard streets northwest, today and Wednesday.

"The Spanish Road" is the work of members of the Washington chapter of the League of American Writers and is produced here by the Washington New Theater. Proceeds will go to the rehabilitation fund for American volunteers who have returned from Spain.

MANUFACTURED—
. . . by hand

In the middle 80's manufacture was still "making with the hands." The custom tailour clothed his Southern planter or Northern gentleman, and was proud of his handiwork since it had come to him only with great sacrifice and hard work: an apprentice for years, then a "journeyman," and in time, his own little shop, with an eye to the gentleman of means. And so today, hard work—painstakingly patient hand needling, is reflected in the Hickey-Freeman customized clothes you see at Goldheim's—impeccable in taste, needled by hand to keep the style in and the wear out.

House Is Asked To Air Row on Group Health

Inquiry Into Activities of Medical Societies Is Sought in Bill.

Appointment of a select committee of five members of the House to investigate the row between the District Medical Society and the Group Health Association was asked yesterday by Representative Scott (Democrat), of California, in a resolution introduced in the House.

The resolution is broad enough, moreover, to cover the campaigns of the American Medical Association against similar group health organizations throughout the country.

After a prologue of 11 whereases, the resolution sets forth four objectives of the proposed inquiry:

To inquire into the activities of the American Medical Association, State and county medical societies, the District Medical Society and others against the GHA and other similar groups.

Public Health at Issue.

To determine whether the American Medical Association, its affiliates or the District Medical Society "are engaged in activities prejudicial and detrimental to the health, life, well-being and general welfare of the public."

To ascertain whether the activities of the medical groups are in violation of law, in contravention of their charters, or contrary to medical ethics and sound public policy.

The committee is authorized to hold public hearings and is directed to report its findings and recommendations to Congress.

Among the whereases in the resolution is a statement that the District Medical Society has "directed its members to refuse to enter into consultation with physicians employed by members of the GHA for the purpose of treating or advising Federal employes."

The resolution also cites charges that hospitals have refused their facilities to duly qualified physicians and to members of the GHA who insisted on having GHA physicians.

It calls attention to the expulsion of a GHA doctor from the District Medical Society and charges that the American Medical Association and its affiliates throughout the United States "are taking action to exclude or expel from membership licensed and reputable physicians who have become professionally associated with co-operative groups."

Discrimination Charged.

In a brief speech on the House floor and in a lengthy extension of remarks in the Congressional Record, Scott listed cases of alleged discrimination against GHA patients and physicians and replied to the open letter of Dr. Francis X. McGovern, chairman of the public relations committee of the District Medical Society.

Scott recounted the story of the connection of Dr. Allan E. Lee with the GHA and charged that he resigned under pressure from the medical society. Dr. Raymond E. Selders, of the GHA staff, is now threatened with expulsion from the Harris County (Tex.) Medical Society, Scott said, because of his GHA tie-up.

The officers and members of the District Medical Society, Scott said, "have subjected the physicians of the GHA to severe embarrassment and mental torture."

The American Medical Association is "aiding and abetting" the local society, Scott added, by conducting similar campaigns of persecution against members in a half-dozen other cities.

Says Study Is Needed.

"It is high time that members of Congress have before them the facts which have been developed out of the present controversy," Scott said, "so that we may deal both with problems of hospitalization and of medical care in such a way as to assure Federal employes and other residents of Washington the use of the hospitals and the free employment of physicians of their choice to the full extent of their resources and without discrimination."

"Has it come to this, that a group of citizens are unable to join together in the employment of a group of doctors without experiencing severe limitations in the use of hospital facilities, and without incurring the ruthless opposition of representatives of the Medical Society of the District who are temporarily in control?

"Are Federal employes to be subjected to the autocratic, domineering, inhuman discrimination which I have described purely because they desire to enjoy the benefits of mutual, co-operative association through which they can employ physicians to attend them?"

Treasury's Bills Decline in Price

By the Associated Press.

The Treasury announced last night slightly lower prices for its weekly sale of 91-day Treasury bills.

This week's sale of $100,000,000 worth of the short-term securities brought an average price of 99.978, equivalent to borrowing money at .087 per cent, compared with an average price last week for bills of the same term of 99.983, equivalent to .067 per cent.

Fifty million dollars' worth of 80-day bills brought an average price of 99.982, equivalent to 0.81 per cent.

Hays Exhorts Films to Shun All Propaganda

Movie Czar Says That Press Criticism Makes for Better Pictures.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 28.—The movies must be kept free of propaganda, Will Hays, president of the industry's trade association, said in his annual report tonight.

"The industry has resisted and must continue to resist the lure of propaganda in a sinister sense persistently urged upon it by extremist groups . . . propaganda disguised as entertainment would be neither honest salesmanship nor honest showmanship," he said.

He cited his organization, the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America as "an important and significant case study of the economic, artistic and social achievement of self-government in industry."

He said also that the "the character of motion picture criticism published by the press" had been a definite contributing factor to the "better picture movement."

American movies are meeting increasing distributing difficulties of trade quotas in foreign markets, Hays said.

gourmets, white splashes on their dark clothing.

At precisely 9 p. m. the waiters appeared, for the rules say: "The meal will be served at a definitely prescribed time and shall commence at that hour even though a majority of the members should be absent." Late comers take the course at hand. There were no late comers last night. They all took seats, as to a gavel.

C. C. Schiffeler, of the host hotel, began reading—rather quoting—"Oliver Wendell Holmes said, 'Among the great whom Heaven has made to shine, how few learned the art of arts—to dine,' and Sidney Smith said, 'Serenely full, the epicure would say, fate cannot harm me. I have dined today;' and Savarin said, 'Animals feed, man eats—and only the man of intellect and judgement knows how to eat.'"

Then he introduced G. Selmer Fougner, New York coloumnist on wines: "We began wine drinking at the age of 6; he was born in Chicago and educated in France; at 20 he was an amateur on foods and wines; he is father of the Epicurean Society of Les Amis d'Escoffier and a dozen others; he is the most widely circulated dinner guest in New York and weighs 200 pounds."

But the gourmets were eating. Lucius M. Boomer, of the Waldorf, snaked his lips once, twice, elevated his eyes, introspectively and ever so little, then returned to the world with a look of serene approbation. Gourmet Rene F. Clerk, of Louisiana, inserted a fork in his mouth, held it for the suggestion of a second, to react in a beam. Gourmet L. Gardner Moore, president, Washington Hotel Association, looked for a long moment at Gourmet Robert L. Mouton, of Louisiana, and the looks were held between them, confidentially.

Senator Joseph F. Guffey was eating L'Aiguillette de Boeuf a la Mode Ancienne without apparent reaction. Maj. H. B. Smith, of the White House, studied the entire Ensuite, which is a whole brace, like a man before a sunset, or a starting dawn. Gourmet and Chef Jarrin ate of his own triumph—but nervously, for he was a man on trial.

As the Les belles Angevines givrees Sarah Bernhardt was brought in, Mario di Polo entered with his guitar. He sang as a man inspired of a girl in the West Virginia hills who went wrong and a song about Napoleon and Josephine. The gourmets applauded, but solemnly, for the Creation du grand Maitre was being served over the left shoulders. Jarrin seemed nervous; the gourmets, after two solid hours, were yet eating. Then Le Cafes des Diplomats was served. The gourmets gave up.

Then they told some stories; but the rules don't allow much latitude. The gourmets were sleepy, anyhow. They roused themselves to decide on another dinner in the fall and Chef and Gourmet Jarrin almost wept. It had been such a triumph; Escoffier would be pleased, oh so delighted at it all!

New D. C. Police Court Opens; Doors Stick, Benches Too Tall

But Screwdriver and Saw Will Remedy Most Defects, Architect Says; Judges Wear Robes for First Time in De Luxe Chambers.

The new District Police Court Building opened for business yesterday. Like all new things, it creaked a little in the joints.

The glistening doors of the courtrooms and offices are easy to look at but hard to open. And if you tug at them too strenuously, the shiny, slick floor goes from under you and you are apt to land with a thud.

(A twist of the screw driver will ease the action of the doors, the Municipal Architect's Office explained.)

The lofty judges' benches look like something from a movie set, but the Police Court judges encountered some difficulty in seeing over them. Such is the benches' height and breadth that the clerks are quite out of the judges' vision, and vice versa.

Judge John P. McMahon, while hearing a colliding case in Traffic Court, found he could not see the chart used to "re-enact" the collision. So he descended from the bench and sat at a table with the defendant and the complaining witness.

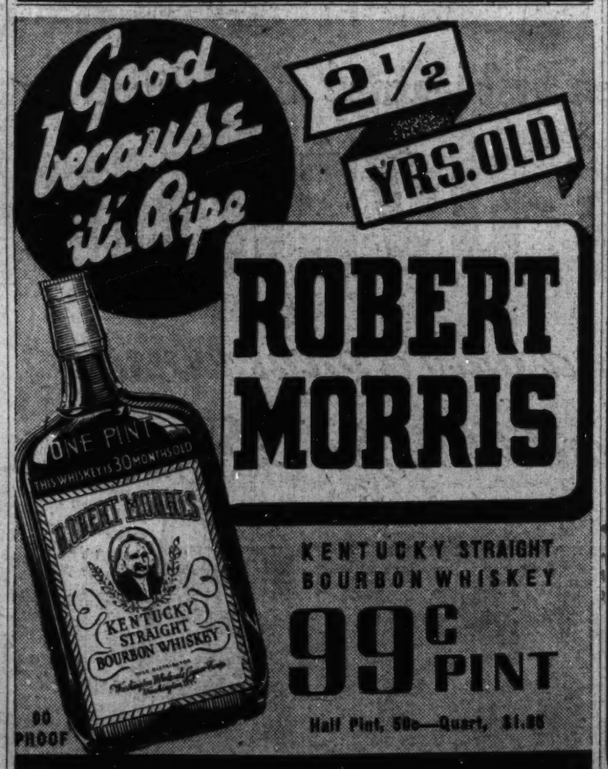
(Further inquiry from Municipal Architect Nathan C. Wyeth disclosed that the benches can easily be sawed down to fit the judges if the judges so request.)

The press was considerably annoyed to find that the new courtrooms provide chairs for the testifying witness, but none for the press.

"No matter how carefully you plan a building, it's impossible to think of everything until you actually move in," Maj. Wyeth explained yesterday. He spent most of the day in the courthouse, inspecting its workings and inviting suggestions as to improvements. One step which will be taken soon, he said, is to install acoustical equipment in some of the big first-floor offices, which proved too noisy for comfort.

In keeping with their de luxe surroundings, the Police Court judges wore their robes to work yesterday. So far as could be learned, the robes never before had been seen, except in official photographs.

The defendants who made history by being the first to appear in the three new courtrooms, all were found guilty and sentenced or fined.



British Cruiser York in D. C. For Five-Day Courtesy Visit

Commissioners to Return Admiral Meyrick's Call Today.

Amid the booming of saluting guns the British cruiser York, flagship of Vice Admiral Sidney J. Meyrick, C. B., R. N., commander in chief of the America and West Indies station, arrived at the Navy Yard here yesterday for a five-day courtesy visit.

Coming to the National Capital from St. Kitts, B. W. I., the 8,250-ton cruiser took Pilot C. B. Milburn aboard at Piney Point and made a quick trip up the river to the dock formerly used by the Presidential yacht Mayflower.

Opposite Hains Point a national salute of 21 guns was fired. It was answered by an equal number of guns from the Navy Yard.

Immediately after the York reached her berth, Capt. F. C. Bradley, British Naval Attache, went aboard and was followed shortly afterward by Comdr. W. S. Popham, who will act as liaison officer for the Britons while they are here.

Later in the day Rear Admiral George T. Pettengill, commandant of the Navy Yard, called on Vice Admiral Meyrick. Brig. Gen. Dana T. Merrill, commander of the Washington Provisional Brigade, also visited the ship yesterday.

Admiral Meyrick, accompanied by Capt. Harold E. Morse, commander of the York, called on Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen to receive the keys to the city. Also in the party were Capt. Bradley and Lieut. J. S. H. Lawrence, aide to the admiral. The District Commissioners will return the call this afternoon.

The York, which previously visited Washington in the annual Navy Day Celebration in 1935, was in particularly festive mood yesterday, for it was Admiral Meyrick's fifty-ninth birthday. A former naval aide de camp to King George V, he has also served as naval secretary to Britain's First Lord of the Admiralty.

The York will be open to the public from 2 p. m. to 5 p. m. tomorrow.

'Lift' Goes on Strike For British Officials

Vice Admiral Sidney J. Meyrick and his aides of H. M. S. York stepped briskly aboard one of the District Building's elevators yesterday.

Five floors above them, in the offices of Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, Washington city officialdom anxiously awaited the traditional call from the commanders of the visiting British naval vessel.

The admiral and his aides were prompt, but they had not counted on the elevator, which age has made uncertain, or on the operator, whom the importance of the occasion had made nervous.

The operator yanked the handle too soon and the car stopped one foot below its destination. Down went the car for a fresh start, but this time, and twice again, the elevator failed to make the grade by a foot, and the operator, now disgusted, flung open the gates and announced: "Step up, please."

Said the admiral to Hazen: Your lift has gone on a strike, Mr. Commissioner."

House Kills Items For Army Housing

By the Associated Press.

Several attempts to increase the Army appropriation bill to finance construction at Army posts were defeated in the House yesterday.

In addition, a provision to appropriate $50,000 for an intermediate Air Corps station at Connellsville, Pa., and Delegate Dimond's request for a new air base in Alaska were defeated.

Without debate, however, the House approved tentatively a $75,000 appropriation to rebuild barracks at Fort Niagara, N. Y., destroyed by fire three weeks ago.

Dr. W. M. Yater Delivers 1938 Kober Lecture

D.C. Medical Society Hears Georgetown Man on Goiter and Heart.

Dr. Wallace M. Yater, professor of medicine at Georgetown University Medical School, discussed "Goiter and the Heart" in the Kober scientific lecture for 1938 before the Medical Society of the District of Columbia last night. Dr. Yater questioned, among other things, a close association between heart failure and the condition known as exothalmic goiter, which causes an excessive protrusion of the eyes. Such an association has been widely assumed.

The lecture was delivered in Gaston Hall at the university. The Very Rev. Arthur A. O'Leary, S. J., president of Georgetown, who presided, paid a tribute to the professional and humanitarian record of the late Dr. George Martin Kober, whose endowment in 1920 made the annual lectures possible. Dr. Kober was a former president of the District Medical Society and for nearly 40 years served as dean of medicine at Georgetown.

In 900 cases of chronic heart failure, 50 were found to be due to enlarged thyroids, Dr. Yater said—34 with exophthalmic goiter and 16 with toxic adenoma. Of these, 42 were women with an average age of 50 years. "This high incidence probably indicates accuracy of diagnosis and also the effect of hyperthyroidism and age together on the function of the heart," he said. Another study of 1,906 cases of heart disease which came of necropsy indicates, on the other hand, he said, the rarity of enlarged thyroids as a cause of heart failure. In that large number only three cases of exophthalmic goiter were found.

Congestive heart failure never occurs in young individuals with hyperthyroidism, Dr. Yater said, unless accompanied by some independent cardiac lesion. "It is only in older persons, and usually those with a long history of low-grade chronic exophthalmic goiter or more frequently to toxic adenoma of long duration, who have congestive heart failure which can be ascribed as largely due to the hyperthyroidism," he explained.

The fast heart, or tachycardia, has until recently generally been associated with goiter, he said, being thought as due to stimulation of the nerves or to some toxic influence. However, he said, recent studies have disproved that theory. Dr. Yater himself contributed much new light on this matter by his experiments on animals in the Georgetown laboratories with the use of thyroids. He found uniformly that the isolated perfused hearts beat much faster for many hours than the hearts that were not thyroxinized.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Bach's "St. Matthew Passion" is presented in Washington Cathedral under direction of Louis A. Potter, by the Washington Choral Society, assisted by the choirs of Washington L. D. S. Chapel and Calvary M. E. Church, 30 members of the National Symphony Orchestra, Lyman McCrary, organist, and Willa Semple, pianist. Soloists: Emily Coville, Helen Howison, Florence E. Ludy, Mary Apple, Bertha Morgan, Lottie L. Volkmer, William Hayghe, Wilfred Smith, Merle Gates, Sam Cotton, J. L. Stinson, George Stonebraker, Harry E. Yeide and Charles Trowbridge Tittmann.

Washington Cathedral was filled with auditors last evening when the Washington Choral Society ambitiously undertook one of Bach's masterpieces, the "Passion According to St. Matthew," which is comparable in greatness only to his B minor Mass. Louis A. Potter had trained his singers long and arduously, with the result that the organization surpassed anything that it has previously accomplished. While the acoustics of the lofty nave were not always favorable the effect of the choruses was nevertheless impressive and the beauties of the music were well disclosed.

As is customary in the performance of this lengthy work, some excisions were made by the director, who was judicious in his selection of the parts to be omitted. Only those familiar with the score were aware of the cuts, which it is not necessary to enumerate here. It is to be hoped that the society will continu its study of the Passion with a view to future presentations and that the time may come when public appreciation of the masterpiece will be ripe for a complete performance. On this occasion there was certainly a feeling of gratitude for the opportunity to hear the work and of pride in the fact that a local organization was the instrument.

The "St. Matthew Passion" had its first performance on Good Friday, April 15, 1729, in St. Thomas Church in Leipzig with the inadequate vocal and instrumental resources available. We may assume that Bach had hoped that the work would impress the members of the church council, for he immediately afterward asked for more voices in his choir. That his request was refused is one more piece of evidence that the good people of Leipzig were entirely unaware that they harbored a genius in the person of their cantor.

Oddly enough to our present sense of artistic fitness, nine numbers from the Passion had been sung, with a different text, on November 19, 1728, as part of the mourning music at the funeral of Prince Leopold of Coethen. Bach's librettist, Christian Friedrich Henrici, whose pen name was Picander, fitted appropriate words to the music, which had already been composed for church service, and no one was the wiser.

All those who heard last evening's performance must agree that the Washington Choral Society should keep the "St. Matthew Passion" in rehearsal so that it can be repeated. One hearing gives one only a partial glimpse of its manifold musical treasures, and every great work requires long association for its full comprehension.

bert E. Watts, president of the Penn-Mex Fuel Co., and Judge James W. Reid, representing the Consolidated Oil Co. and the Mexican Sinclair Petroleum Corporation.

There were reports that this Government had made representation to President Cardenas of Mexico, but at noon the Secretary said this had not been done and denied that the department had decided to send a "trouble shooter" to Mexico. There also were reports, unconfirmed, that the State Department had placed in abeyance consideration of all questions open between the United States and Mexico pending settlement of the issue raised by expropriation of the oil lands.

Financial Pressure Seen.

Interest, however, centered chiefly on this Government's silver action. The assumption was that the United States wished to bring Mexico to terms by exerting financial pressure on that country's currency and monetary stability.

Be that as it may, the Treasury's silver action had an immediate reaction on the Mexican peso, but it also had adverse reactions in Shanghai, London and New York. The peso was quoted in Mexico City at 4.60 to 4.70 to the dollar, a drop of 50 to 60 points from Saturday's quotations.

The Chinese dollar dropped at Shanghai, according to the Associated Press, to a low of 22 cents, then rallied and closed at 23.5 cents. The Saturday quotation had been 29 cents. The price fell, the Associated Press explained, when the foreign banks in Shanghai abandoned a "gentlemen's agreement" with the Chinese government to keep the price at 29 cents. The banks acted to bring their quotations in line with unofficial trading in bills of exchange outside of the banks, the cable reported.

American bankers in Shanghai were quoted as saying the finance ministry's system of allotting foreign exchange was responsible for the decline and that the Chinese dollar would slip further unless the ministry provided allotments of about 5,000,000 Chinese dollars to take care of urgent foreign trade needs.

Rigid Control in Force.

"The Chinese government recently instituted rigid control of exchange transactions, issuing allotments only once a week from Hankow. Bankers said this was due largely to establishment of the Japanese-controlled "Federal Reserve Bank of China" at Peiping. This bank issues notes which it exchanges at par with notes of Chinese government banks, which, Chinese officials feared, might be presented for redemption at Chinese banks in Central China in foreign currencies."

Meanwhile, the price of silver at London and New York dropped, inspired by the fear that if Mexico's great silver output was no longer to be absorbed by the Treasury after April 1, it might be dumped on the world market. Handy & Harman, bullion dealers, quoted 43¾ cents an ounce for foreign silver, a decrease from 44¾ cents which had stood since last June.

In London the silver price slumped 1.70 cents an ounce. The Treasury's new offering price of 44 cents an ounce is the lowest since the Government embarked on its purchase of world silver under the terms of the 1934 silver purchase act. The Treasury has paid close to 80 cents an ounce for silver under that program, but the price gradually slumped until it reached 45 cents in January, 1936. It remained at that figure until yesterday.

Stocks of mining companies with Mexican properties also were affected by the silver moves. American Smelting & Refining dropped $1.75 a share; U. S. Smelting, Refining & Mining lost $2; American Metals lost $2 on the preferred and $1 on the common. American oil company shares, however, remained firm.

Peso Falls 50 Points.

Mexico City, March 28 (AP).—The peso reacted sharply today to the United States decision to stop purchases of Mexican silver, while the nation awaited anxiously Washington's next move on President Lazaro Cardenas' expropriation of the foreign oil industry.

In unofficial street trading the peso was quoted at 4.60 to 4.70 to the dollar, a drop of 50 to 60 points from Saturday's quotations.

The business was conducted by private banks.

The government's dire need for immediate world markets for oil from the expropriated fields was emphasized, meanwhile, by a survey showing a 65 to 75 per cent cut in production.

Storage tanks at the three leading shipping points—Tampico, Tuxpan and Minatitlan—were filled to capacity. Refined tanks at Tampico and Minatitlan also were full.

This left the petroleum council, named to administer the $400,000,000 industry, with no place to store the black gold flowing from the few wells still open.

The only refinery said to be working at capacity was Aguila's federal district plant. Its 13,000-barrel daily output was being absorbed locally.

With the exception of one cargo, no oil has been shipped out of Mexico in the last nine days, in contrast to the 100,000 barrels a day heretofore.

President Cardenas announced another step in the nation's "Mexico for Mexicans" program would be taken during the first 15 days of April when the national railways would be turned over to the Railway Workers Syndicate to operate.

The President empowered the syndicate to name administrative officers and authorized Finance Minister Eduardo Suarez to complete negotiations on the workers' pay.

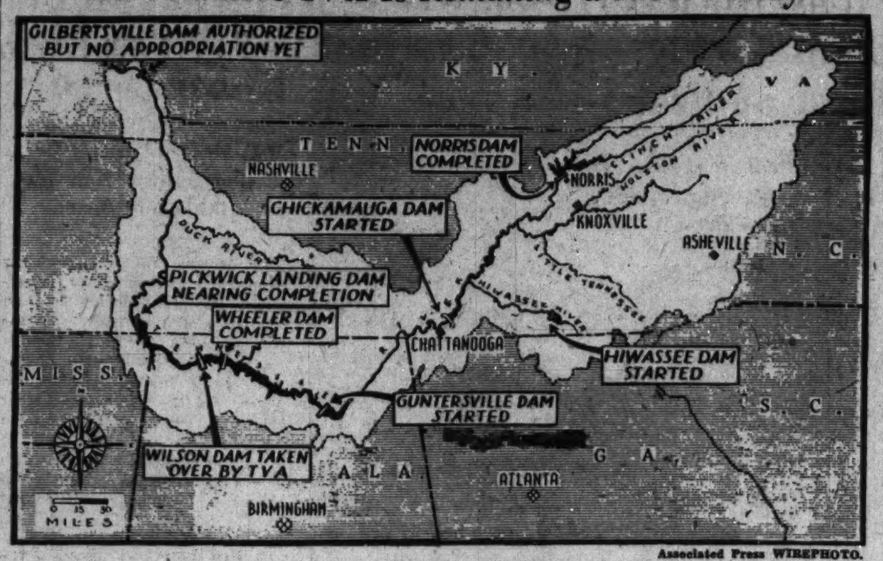
New York, March 28.—Common stockholders of Continental Can Co., Inc., aggregated 34,787 on March 18, the largest number in its history, it was disclosed today. The average holding was 82 shares. At the beginning of 1923 the list of stockholders totaled less than 1,000 names.

Holdings of brokers, regarded as the floating supply, aggregated 580,233 out of 2,853,971 common shares outstanding.

Here's Where TVA Is Remaking a River Valley



Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

The TVA has spent five years and $155,000,000 doing the things indicated on this map, and churning up a controversy over its methods and merits. In this area, the size of England, it has tried to check floods, improve navigation and create electrical energy. Advocates claim it has reduced electrical rates; foes say it has given "monopolistic" industries long-time contracts. It has completed Norris Dam, Wheeler Dam and a reservoir 15 miles above Wilson Dam. Dams at Chickamauga and Guntersville on the Tennessee River and Hiwassee on the Hiwassee River have been started. A dam has been authorized at Gilbertsville, Ky., but no appropriation has been made. TVA officials say the dams will provide 300 miles of navigable lakes.

when he died, as were a daughter, Mrs. Gordon Auchincloss, and her husband, a New York attorney. Another daughter is Mrs. Randolph Tucker, of Boston.

"World's Best Listener."

By the United Press.

The world's best listener was one of the titles bestowed upon Edward Mandell House, Texas businessman and politician who rose to be an unofficial member of President Wilson's Cabinet, in the capacity of confidant and adviser. Before, during and after the World War, Col. House was dramatized as "the man behind the throne" who formulated the foreign policies of the Wilson Administration.

Col. House, known as "colonel" to the Nation and the world, inherited this title from serving on the staff of Gov. Charles A. Culbertson of Texas. He never held public office and never desired one. President Wilson sought to name him a Cabinet member in 1913, but House declined. He offered Mr. Wilson his services, however, and that was the start of the long and intimate association between these two men.

Col. House never met Mr. Wilson until a year before the former Governor of New Jersey was elected President. Of this meeting House said:

"We talked and talked. We knew each other for congenial souls at the very beginning. I don't remember what we said, but we hit the high spots—we talked in generalities, you know."

That talk was the foundation of a friendship that led the peculiar geniuses of House and Wilson together through the World War and into the peace conference at Versailles.

Genius for Statecraft.

Mr. Wilson was a statesman with an instinct for politics. Col. House was a politician with a genius for statecraft.

Col. House entered the field of international relations in 1914 as the President's unofficial ambassador to Europe. He sailed for Germany and carried a personal letter from Mr. Wilson to Kaiser Wilhelm. This was in May, only a few weeks before Serajevo, and House had conceived a plan to avert war, which even then seemed near. House's plan was to bring about a formal understanding among Great Britain, France, Germany and the United States looking to the reduction of armament, the preservation of peace and closer trade relations.

The result of this one-man mission was that Col. House was thwarted in every move he made. While on the high seas on his way home, the World War began. From that time until America's entrance into the conflict, House guided many neutrality missions, and he made frequent trips to Europe to discuss blockade measures, submarine warfare, peace negotiations and other important problems.

House's political acumen was tested to the fullest in 1916. In this Presidential campaign he was in constant touch with Democratic campaign managers on subjects of strategy, and it was House who urged that the principal fight be made in the West. The wisdom of this move was manifest when President Wilson was re-elected with California as the pivotal State.

The next spring, with the entrance of the United States into the war, House became more active than ever. He met and conferred with various Allied commissions sent to America. He read, sifted and digested reports and played an important role in formulating war policies. In October, 1917, Col. House went to Europe as chairman of the first American war delegation.

This mission met in Paris in November, 1917, and discused ways and means of pooling resources and coordinating every arm of the Allies to bring the war to a successful conclusion.

Col. House went to Europe again in the fall of 1918 to assist in framing the terms of the armistice between Germany and Austria, and was the sole representative of the United States. This was the beginning of a greater role than ever yet played by the man who already was mentioned in the same breath with President Wilson.

The President next appointed Col. House a member of the American Commisison to Negotiate Peace. In that capacity he helped shoulder the burden that otherwise would save fallen with full force upon Mr. Wilson. During the long and trying periods at the Paris conference Col. House worked zealously and quietly.

When President Wilson returned to Washington after his first trip to Paris as head of the American Peace Commission, Col. House remained as his spokesman. The work of treaty building went on. Col. House acquiesced in the proposal for two treaties to solve the tangle as a result of the wide difference of opinion as to the League of Nations.

Texan Irked.

When Mr. Wilson returned, he rejected the proposition. He took the ground that if the peace was effected in one treaty and the League of Nations constituted in the second, the peace treaty would be accepted but the League of Nations pact might be defeated in several countries—notably England, France and the United States. His opinion was that to secure the desired peace, the doubtful nations would accept the League of Nations pact in the same treaty.

The repudiation by Mr. Wilson of the work done by Col. House in his absence irked the Texan. Relations between the colonel and Mr. Wilson grew strained. When the work in Paris was over, both returned to their separate paths—Mr. Wilson to the White House and ultimately to invalided semi-seclusion in his private home, while Col. House took up his residence in New York, keeping his keen interest in public men and affairs, but living quietly.

Col. House was born at Houston, Tex., July 26, 1858. He was the son of Thomas W. House, banker and cotton factor, a friend of Gen. Sam Houston, Col. Bowie and other great men in early Texas.

Moved to Austin.

House first thought of politics at the age of 18. He was a student at a New Haven grammar school and his roommate was Ollie Morton, a son of Oliver P. Morton, then in his prime at Washington and a rival of Blaine. Young Morton made frequent trips to Washington, and occasionally House accompanied him. When young House was on the eve of graduating from Cornell University he was called home by the death of his father. After the funeral House found himself the owner of many thousand widely scattered acres and large business interests. He soon moved to Austin.

Col. House's political power was first brought to bear in a gubernatorial campaign in Texas in 1892. The then Gov. Hogg was a candidate for re-election. The interests were against him at the start of the campaign; public sentiment likewise. Before the campaign ended conditions had changed. Hogg was re-elected. Though the public did not know it, Col. House was Hogg's campaign manager. In 1910 Col. House first turned his attention to national politics. He recognized the situation of the Taft Administration and in it saw a Democratic victory. Then Col. House began casting about for a candidate.

Never Appeared Excited.

He could see no man in Washington suitable to make the race. For a time he considered the late Mayor Gaynor of New York. Just then another luminary appeared—the Governor of New Jersey, Woodrow Wilson. Col. House watched his progress for a year. Letters were exchanged and Mr. Wilson and Col. House met for the first time in 1911.

In appearance Col. House was slender. He was always neatly dressed. He never appeared excited.

Mourned by Roosevelt.

By the Associated Press.

Warm Springs, Ga., March 28.—President Roosevelt, in a statement on the death of Col. E. M. House today, paid tribute to the Presidential consultant.

"A great and unique figure has been lost to our national life in the death of Col. House," the President said of the man who counseled with him in the 1932 campaign and before the Roosevelt Cabinet was formed.

"The trusted friend and adviser in foreign affairs of a great war President, Woodrow Wilson," he added, "Col. House possessed a sagacity, prudence, patriotism and integrity which made his counsels invaluable in one of the most critical periods of world history.

"Few Americans have possessed in such degree the confidence of statesmen at home and abroad as did this modest nad self-effacing man who placed his country's good and the good of humanity above all personal consfderations.

"As one who had long enjoyed the privilege of his friendship I shall miss his wise counsel and unvarying loyalty."

No Wonder You Are Constipated!

What do you eat for breakfast? Coffee, toast, maybe some eggs? What do you eat for lunch and dinner? Bread, meat, potatoes? No wonder you're constipated—due to lack of "bulk." And "bulk" doesn't mean the amount you eat. It means the kind of food that forms a soft, bulky mass in the bowels. It's this mass that helps your bowels move.

The common sense thing to do about it is to eat a natural laxative food. Kellogg's All-Bran for breakfast will give you just the "bulk" you need. And it gives you, in addition, Nature's great intestinal-tonic, vitamin B_1. Eat this crunchy toasted cereal every day, drink plenty of water, and life will be brighter for you! All-Bran is made by Kellogg in Battle Creek. Sold by every grocer.

the prestige of the House? Why should we back down under the whip of the Senate?

"Lets' not be rubber stamps voluntarily."

Maverick charged that the Senate resolution might set up a "purge trial" to get rid of Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, ousted chairman of the TVA.

He said the Norris resolution was worded in a manner preventing investigation of charges other than those in the measure. He then declared that he had been unable to get direct information from the TVA when he was preparing a speech on the subject, but that a TVA press relations man had visited him at once and "filled me with misinformation." The vigorous Texan said that he had then dug up "the facts" for himself from TVA reports, and added:

Says Friends Spied On.

"But apparently the powers that be in the TVA did not believe a Congressman has sense enough to add up a column of figures himself. I have some friends working for the TVA and apparently they were suspected of supplying me with information I got from the report. As a result my friends were spied upon and harassed.

"I am a friend of the TVA, but I can't put up with tactics such as these."

Snell, in his appearance, declared that "this is not the time, I personally think, for an investigation of the public utilities and of power policies."

Several committee members nodded assent at this point. Representative Eugene E. Cox (Democrat), of Georgia, bitter opponent of the New Deal, asked if Snell did not fear that the Senate resolution would be more of a power probe than a TVA investigation, and Snell assented. The questions of Chairman O'Connor; of Representative Martin Dies (Democrat), of Texas, enemy of the wage-hour bill and of TVA, and of several other members indicated at this point the unanimity of their views that the investigation should be confined to phases of the TVA's difficulties.

Representative May made four charges:

"Why was a certain bond issue at Knoxville, selling at 40 cents on the dollar, boosted to a hundred and then bought by the TVA?

"Why did the TVA pay $50 an acre for phosphate lands in Tennessee that had been previously purchased by a private party for $2 an acre?

"Why has the TVA disobeyed its mandate from Congress to set up its principal offices at Muscle Shoals, Ala.?

"Why did the TVA pay an exorbitant price for a certian tract of land and then brazenly tell the Military Affairs Committee of the House it had done so to prevent the Aluminum Co. of America from building a dam at that site?"

The committee will meet again today. Drafting of a general TVA resolution, with addition of a query about the placing of TVA headquarters at Knoxville, Tenn., instead of at Muscle Shoals, was expected.

Although a bright sun covered the blossoms most of the day the high temperature of 58 was 2 degrees under the maximum of the previous day. Official forecast of the Weather Bureau for today is increasing cloudiness with warmer temperatures and possible showers tonight.

Meanwhile, the display of amaryllis at the Department of Agriculture greenhouses, Fourteenth street and Constitution avenue, and the large variety of flowers in the gardens of the Botanic Gardens, at First and Canal streets, provided added delight to the thousands of visitors here to enjoy the rare scenic wonders.

The rock garden of the Botanic Gardens now contains 5,000 hyacinths, 20,000 tulips, 3,000 pansies and 12,000 Alpine plants. Visitors to the gardens average several thousand persons a day.

Antidote Is Found For Sulfanilamide

Memphis, Tenn., March 28 (U.P.).—Dr. William B. Wendel, professor of chemistry at the University of Tennessee School of Medicine, today announced discovery of an antidote, methylene blue dye, which makes safe the use of sulfanilamide in treatment of gonorrhea, meningitis, throat irritations and mastoids.

More than a score died or were seriously ill recently after taking an elixir of sulfanilamide.

Wendel said injections of methylene blue dye—discovered after 10 years of research and tested on 200 patients—counteracts toxic effects which result in "severe headaches, nausea and vomiting of about 10 per cent of persons treated with sulfanilamide."

Japanese Open Fire Upon Area Of U. S. Mission

'Unable to Wait' Until Diplomats Clear Town of Chinese Troops.

By the Associated Press.

Peiping, March 28.—A Japanese military spokesman said today Japanese troops had begun bombarding Lini, in Southern Shantung Province, being "unable to wait until American diplomatic machinery gets Chinese troops away from the vicinity of the American Presbyterian mission there."

(Reports from Shanghai said United States Consul General Clarence E. Gauss had informed missionaries at Lini and Yihsien by radio of Japanese charges that mission property was being used by Chinese forces and warned them of possibilities of Japanese retaliation.)

The spokesman said the situation involved "a diplomatic question" and that the Japanese had warned the Americans that the Chinese were in a position nearby.

Chinese Gain Widely.

Shanghai (Tuesday), March 29 (AP).—Chinese reported striking military successes in Shantung, Shansi and Anhwei provinces today, while a new Japanese-dominated government for the conquered areas of central China started functioning in Nanking.

The government, Chinese in personnel but sponsored by the Japanese, was inaugurated yesterday. Masayuki Tani, Japan's ambassador at large in China, said it was needed to save the people from "maladministration and anarchy" and congratulated "the 400,000,000 people of China on the birth of a new China."

Victories reported by the Chinese were scattered over the whole central China front, the chief ones being at Lincheng, Tsaochwang and Tsining in southwestern Shantung, Pinglu and Fenkiu on the north bank of the Yellow River and Kwangteh in east Anhwei.

These reports were denied by a Japanese army spokesman, who stated that the retreats, if any, had been strategic and not compulsory.

Foreign observers were agreed, however, that the Chinese counterthrusts were producing one of the most intensive and most unrelenting battles of the war.

Reports from Hankow, provisional Chinese capital, said Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek had flown to the central battle front to take personal charge of the drive.

Forty truck loads of dead Japanese soldiers arrived in Shanghai—evidence that the Japanese have been suffering heavy losses in recent battles. Military observers estimated there were 600 corpses in the convoy.

Japanese reported they had killed 2,500 Chinese in a major engagement in northwestern Shansi, east of Hoku.

Chinese said six Japanese warships, accompanied by 10 airplanes, had bombarded Chinese positions on the Yangtze River at Tatung, 64 miles west of Wuhu, in an attempt to land soldiers, but had been repulsed.

Soviet Demand Rejected.

Tokyo, March 28 (AP).—The Japanese government today declined to take action on a Soviet Russian protest against failure of Manchukuo, Japan's protectorate, to pay the final installment of the purchase price for the Chinese Eastern Railway.

This installment, about $2,729,000, was due March 23, but Manchukuo withheld payment, alleging Russia had failed to fulfill an obligation to pay certain private creditors of the railway.

Senate Votes Reorganization; Error Returns Bill to House

Offices

plan fight. An estimated 75,000 telegrams and letters were received by the Senate over the week-end, overwhelmingly opposing passage.

So close was the Senate vote on the Walsh motion to recommit the bill that a switch of three votes would have changed the result. On passage of the bill, 47 Democrats joined with 1 Progressive and 1 Independent in support of the bill, while 26 Democrats, 14 Republicans and 2 Farmer-Laborites voted "no."

Only one Senator shifted his vote between the recommittal count and final passage. He was Senator Robert J. Bulkley (Democrat), of Ohio, who voted to send the bill back to committee but later voted "aye" on final passage. Bulkley was said to have received about 2,500 letters and telegrams over the week-end.

The bill passed yesterday by the Senate gives the President power to merge and abolish agencies, but he could not abolish functions and he could not revamp quasi-judicial agencies. The President's orders would take effect in 60 days if not specifically disapproved by Congress.

The three-member Civil Service Commission would be abolished and a single civil service administrator appointed by the President with a 15-year term. The President could blanket into the classified civil service groups of employes now outside of it.

Comptroller to Go.

The Comptroller General's office would be abolished. His current controls would be transferred to the Budget Director, and a Congressionally appointed Auditor General would have power only of post audit over Federal expenditures.

A new Department of Welfare would be created, absorbing existing Federal welfare agencies. The President would be empowered to appoint six administrative assistants.

The pending House civil service bill closely approximates personnel features of the Senate bill, but the pending House accounting measure would continue the General Accounting office, with authority to make advance rulings on spending. The Comptroller General's office also would be continued, but he would be subject to removal by the President.

These House provisions are expected to be substituted for Senate bill features by the House reorganization committee, which also may carry again before the House the bureau reorganization authorization, which already has passed the chamber once. The latter measure, bearing the name of Representative Lindsay C. Warren (Democrat), of North Carolina, would enable the President's merger orders to take immediate effect, without a Congressional lay-over. Congress could act to block them.

It was this Warren merger bill that Byrnes yesterday vainly attempted to call up in the Senate, with the intention of striking out all clauses after the enacting clause, and substituting the four-point Senate bill.

It was Senator Bennett Champ Clark (Democrat), of Missouri, who made the point of order against the maneuver, and Vice President Garner sustained Clark. When Byrnes renewed his motion after passage of the Senate bill, Senator Edward R. Burke (Democrat), of Missouri, launched an opposition filibuster, and Clark threatened to inject the anti-lynching issue. In the end, Byrnes yielded and allowed his bill to go to the House instead of to conference.

Totalitarianism Feared.

In the impassioned debate that preceded passage, Senator David I. Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts, said proponents of the measure "seem blind" to the totalitarian course it would open. Senator Hiram Johnson (Republican), of California, said "no man should ask" the powers the President seeks, and linked the bill with the court plan. And Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, said the bill delivers "the Nation's purse to the President."

Senator William E. Borah (Republican), of Idaho, said the Presidential merger powers were unconstitutional under the Supreme Court's NRA decision. Borah said "Congress created these agencies and in my opinion you can't destroy them without consulting the agency which created them.

In his last appeal for passage, Senator Byrnes warned that a vote for recommittal would be tantamount to a vote "to kill the bill." He said he would resign from the Reorganization Committee if the bill was recommitted, because "I can do nothing more than I have done."

Senate Majority Leader Alben W. Barkley and Senator Pat Harrison (Democrat), of Mississippi, his unsuccessful rival for the Senate leadership last year, stood side by side in supporting Byrnes. Senator Robert M. La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin), said the bill will result in greater efficiency, trained personnel and sounder accounting methods.

made the same statement and elaborated on it.

Nazi authorities announced they had a Schuschnigg letter in which the former chancellor admitted insincerity in his Berchtsgaden agreement with Hitler, and that he had no intention of abiding by it. They added that after entering Austria they found posters printed in advance announcing that in the plebiscite (planned by Schuschnigg but canceled by the German ultimatum) foes of annexation received 97 per cent of the votes.

Murder May Be Charge.

Nazi chiefs said they had found hidden stores of arms, some of them in monastaries, and uncovered plots to foment violence for which Nazis would be blamed.

Such allegations as these pointed to the possibility Schuschnigg might be tried on charges of "treason against the German people." The possibility was not ruled out, however, that the former chancellor might be charged in the criminal court with murder. During recent troubled times in Austria the government which Schuschnigg headed caused the execution of many political opponents, including Nazi Party workers.

Referring to those executions Hitler bitterly stated that the Nazi "martyrs" were "even denied the honorable bullet and hanged."

3,500 Seek Visas.

Vienna, March 28 (AP).—Visa applications to the United States reached a new high today when an estimated 3,500 Austrians, chiefly Jews, crowded the corridors of the American Legation.

The average since the Nazification of Austria previously had been from 1,000 to 1,500 daily. The increase was believed to be due to Saturday's speech of Field Marshal Hermann Wilhelm Goering in which the No. 2 Nazi leader declared "Jews must go."

Hails "Strongest Germany."

Berlin, March 28 (AP).—Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler tonight acclaimed Austro-German union as the greatest miracle in German history and the new nation as the strongest Germany that ever existed.

Speaking to a cheering throng in the Sports Palace, he ruthlessly denounced former Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg of Austria as a traitor to the German cause.

Hitler's speech in the big barnlike auditorium was the third he has delivered in the campaign for the April 10 plebiscite on Austro-German union.

He spoke for an hour and five minutes and concluded with a vigorous appeal for an affirmative vote in the plebiscite.

"On March 13 the greater Germany was created," he declared. "On April 10 it will be substantiated.

"If one believes in providence, then such providence cannot work miracles unless it desires the success of that which it permits to succeed.

"What has transpired in these last three weeks is a miracle—a miracle in our history!"

Italy 'Incident' Raises Fear of War on France

Paris Bomber Crashes on Sardinia; Duce Spurs Investigation.

By the United Press.

Rome, March 28.—Diplomats believed tonight Premier Mussolini might be preparing to make use of a new "international incident" in case he has to fulfill his threat of war to prevent French intervention in Spain. Observers' fears were based on rising anger over the crash of a French bombing plane on the Island of Sardinia.

Il Duce was said to be worried acutely over the possibility of French intervention in favor of the Spanish loyalists.

It was announced officially that an inquiry was under way to "determine the motives for a night flight over Italian territory."

All five of the French crew died in the crash.

Italy warned France two days ago that any intervention on behalf of the loyalists "may lead to war."

The developments were given striking emphasis when Air Minister Giuseppe Valle, in a speech at Rome's Littoria airfield today commemorating the fifteenth anniversary of Italy's reorganized air force, publicly told Mussolini:

"During these 15 years of new life Fascist aviation has given magnificent proofs of its bravery in different skies, but has not yet given the supreme proof. It impatiently awaits your orders to do so."

London, March 28 (AP).—The insurgent Spanish regime tonight handed a note to Great Britain charging the Barcelona government planned an air raid over French territory in planes with false Italian markings to "provoke an international conflict."

Perpignan, France, March 28 (AP).—Ground crews and pilots from the Chartres air base arrived today at St. Laurent-de-la-Salanque with 15 of the French air force's newest fighting planes. This gave rise to a belief that France would establish an aerial patrol of the Spanish border.

three other insurgent columns drove toward the objective of Barcelona.

The United Press correspondent at Barcelona, Irving B. Pflaum, quoted eyewitnesses as saying that approximately 1,500 persons were killed in the attack on Fraga by nearly 200 planes—the biggest air raid staged in this or any other war. The victims included 400 civilians killed and wounded.

The despairing efforts of the loyalists to halt the superiorly equipped insurgent armies and save Catalonia spread grim fear among the 1,500,000 persons in Barcelona.

Premier Juan Negrin prepared to make a radio address appealing for a valiant last stand against the "barbaric invasion directed by the hangmen of Europe."

The United States Government prepared to move its Barcelona embassy and consulate from the city, where repeated rebel air raids have taken civilian lives by the hundreds.

It was indicated that the embassy would be transferred to the small town of Caldetas on the highway to the French frontier where the British embassy is located.

When the embassy moves American citizens will be warned that they remain in Barcelona at their own risk.

Drive Consolidated.

Cabinet leaders, including War Minister Indalecio Prieto, were in almost daylong consultation in Barcelona.

Franco's war planes continued their destruction throughout the day, sweeping up and down the Catalonian border and bombing the towns of Tarragona, San Vicente Calders, Castellon and many villages.

Franco's drive to the sea, only 34 miles away from the vicinity of Zorita in Castellon, was greatly consolidated during the day when his Moroccan troops captured Mequinenza at the confluence of the Cinca and Ebro rivers 14 miles south of Fraga.

Mequinenza is the southern end of the loyalists' "Lenin Line" of steel and concrete defense works that gave way Sunday.

North of Fraga by the border the insurgents extended their control of the important line of communications along the Zaidin Canal.

From all along the 130-mile front came reports of almost unchallenged insurgent victories as the loyalists gave way under the attacks of air fleets, scores of tanks, big siege guns and even bicycle corps.

Franco's headquarters reported the capture of nearly 125 towns, villages and hamlets as well as thousands of prisoners and enormous stocks of war materials during the last 24 hours.

On Sunday—the biggest day of the Spanish war thus far—Franco's forces advanced 31 miles, captured 2,485 square kilometers of territory, scores of villages and towns, penetrated two new provinces for the first time and claimed 7,000 prisoners.

Intervention Meeting.

London, March 28 (AP).—The long-inactive nonintervention subcommittee on the Spanish civil war today was summoned to meet March 31, indicating the possibility of decisive steps to get foreign "volunteer" troops out of Spain.

(The withdrwal of Italian troops from the insurgent armies, now sweeping toward the Mediterranean, has been under discussion between Britain and Italy at Rome and an agreement has been reported near.)

Italy Opposes Hulls Plan to Help Refugees

While a delegation from the Jewish Peoples' Committee was conferring yesterday with Secretary of State Cordell Hull, on his proposal to aid emigration of Jewish political refugees from Germany and Austria, newspaper reports were received that Italy, one of the 29 countries whose co-operation was asked, opposed the suggestion.

Almost simultaneously reports came that England, The Netherlands and Brazil were in hearty accord with Hull's proposal.

The Italian Foreign Office, it was reported by the United Press, has informally advised the American Embassy in Rome that Italy opposes the suggestion. Some observers, it was stated, believed the Italian stand was taken so as not to offend Germany.

A dispatch from the London office of the same news agency said the British Home Office and Ministry of Labor planned immediate steps to establish an international organization to provide sanctuary for Austrian and German refugees.

The Netherlands cabinet was reported by the Associated Press as warmly welcoming the Hull idea, but also pointing out the desirability of harmonizing the work with a similar project of a League of Nations group. The Foreign Minister of Brazil was reported by the Associated Press to have advised Secretary Hull he would facilitate the entry of Austrian refugees into Brazil.

William Weiner, president of the Jewish Peoples' Committee, headed the delegation which conferred with Hull.

A Patriotic Purchase.

With the acquisition of the Harmsworth collection of books of the English Renaissance, including 656 items of incunabula, the already vast importance to scholars of the Folger Shakespeare Library has been virtually doubled. Dr. Joseph Quincy Adams, director of the library, made no exaggeration when he described the recently consummated purchase as "a matter of national importance."

The pre-eminence of the Folger Library in Shakespeariana is, of course, well known to students and, with the reviving interest in Shakespeare, is becoming well known to the general public. In this field there is nothing else in all the world that even approaches the Folger collection. What has been less well realized, even to scholars, is the library's tremendous wealth of books, not directly relating to Shakespeare, but covering the period from the end of the Wars of the Roses to the establishment of the Commonwealth.

By adding to this material the almost priceless Harmsworth items the trustees have raised the Folger Library to rank with the world's greatest storehouses of sixteenth and seventeenth century manuscripts and books. In this field, too, it will have no superior and its only peers will be the famous Bodleian Library at Oxford, the British Museum and the Huntington Library in California.

One reason for this is that the books of imaginate literature collected by Henry Clay Folger and the books of Renaissance philosophy, theology and what would now be called social science collected by Sr. R. Leicester Harmsworth almost perfectly complement each other. The same thing may now be said of the two great libraries of Washington. The Library of Congress shelters what is probably the world's greatest collection of modern books. If it is relatively weak in background literature, that weakness will be fully compensated by the proximity of the Harmsworth and Folger collections. Thus Washington, in addition to its other assets, may see itself destined to become a world center of literary research.

The trustees of Amherst College who administer the Folger funds, and Amherst's president, Dr. Stanley King, who negotiated the present purchase, have done an immeasurable service for their country and for its Capital.

Reply To Mexico.

The Treasury's decision to stop buying silver from Mexico will probably impose a real hardship on the Cardenas government. About 13 per cent of its revenue comes from the mining industry. This sudden cessation of silver purchases by the United States will not only cut into the receipts of the Mexican treasury; it is also likely to weaken that country's monetary system.

Such revenue losses would be far less serious if they could be dissociated from other burdens recently voluntarily assumed by the Mexican government. With the expropriation of foreign oil properties, that government cut off nearly 7 per cent of its income. Now it faces the necessity of indemnifying the oil companies for properties valued at $400,000,000. Moreover, the Cardenas administration has raised import duties to a point where tariff revenue has also been diminished. Its obligations have been greatly expanded while its revenue has shrunk.

For that gloomy outlook Mexico alone is responsible. President Cardenas must have anticipated that some change would be made in the benefits extended to Mexico by the United States when American interests were so flagrantly disregarded. The road to co-operation is not a one-way street. The United States could not reasonably continue granting what is in effect a silver subsidy to Mexico when the Cardenas government is unwilling to reciprocate in any way.

In spite of the fact that discontinuation of silver purchases from Mexico may embarrass that country, no reasonable person will assert that the United States is applying pressure to our southern neighbor. There never was any economic justification for the silver-purchase policy from the American viewpoint. The agreement to take Mexican silver at bonus prices could only be defended as a part of President Roosevelt's good neighbor policy. As such it became impossible when Mexico adopted a definitely non-co-operative attitude.

The United States has wisely abandoned all thought of interfering in the internal affairs of the Latin-American republics. Any tendency to revert to pressure tactics would be deplorable. It would be just as great a mistake, however, to let any country assume that it can cut off American trade and take over the property of United States citizens while continuing to receive thinly-veiled subsidies from this Government.

Colonel House.

Of all the great galaxy of leaders who flitted across the international stage during the dramatic days of the World War, none played quite so unique a role as did Edward Mandell House.

For all that tremendous period Col. House occupied a place of transcendent importance at the right hand of Woodrow Wilson. With seemingly selfless devotion and unquestioned loyalty he served the War President as friend, counselor, buffer and agent and was entrusted with more important missions than has ever fallen to the lot of any other man in American history.

Broadly speaking, House was the nearest approach to an eminence grise this country has ever had. But it would be an exaggeration of his role as Wilson's intimate to compare him seriously with the Mazarins and the Holsteins of the Old World. He was never in any real sense the "man behind the throne," as they unquestionably were. He was no spinner of dark and devious diplomatic webs. If, from time to time, he appeared to exercise vast power it was primarily because he reflected it.

Other Presidents, before and after Wilson's day, have had recourse to executive agents to serve them as their eyes and ears in undertaking special missions at home and abroad. Indeed, the practice is as old as the Presidency. But it was House's good fortune to play that part during a period of vast historic importance in which America's role was crucial.

How well he played it will long remain the subject of violent controversy. At once shrewd and naive, practical in domestic politics but untrained in international affairs, he made many mistakes. Some were of serious nature, as when he misinterpreted Wilson's wishes when in 1916 he went on the last peace mission before the United States itself entered the war. But more often than not the advice he gave to the President was eminently sound.

In any event, it is now clear that the final say regarding American policy at all times rested with Woodrow Wilson himself. This was true with respect to the question of our entry into the European conflict and with respect to all other important issues that faced that Administration.

This circumstance, which Col. House was too intelligent an individual not to sense, makes the problem of the House-Wilson relationship extremely difficult to assess. For the possibility is always present that the advice which House was so often asked to give, and which he so freely gave, was advice reflecting the point of view of the occupant of the White House, or at least adjusted to that point of view. It is thus difficult to determine, with respect to any major question and in advance of full documentation, just how influential House really was.

It is virtually certain, however, that House's ultimate place in history will depend on Wilson's place in history. Both men unquestionably labored toward the same great objective of a stabilized and systematized world peace. And House's last public statement looked toward the ultimate fulfillment of Wilson's great vision, now seemingly in ruins, of a world from which armed conflict had been banished. He was a Wilsonian to the last.

A Subsiding Tempest.

Washington's health-economics controversy, which holds a large interest for the country as a whole, has shifted to Capitol Hill. The House has received a resolution to investigate organized medicine's opposition to the Group Health Association. If constructive criticisms could be the result, there would be unanimous support for the proposal. However, with tempers on both sides inflamed by charges and counter-charges of essentially secondary significance, it seems likely that only acrimony would be promoted.

The question is too important to be weighed on anything but the most sober basis. And hopes for calm consideration are greatly encouraged by the words recently addressed to the Washington Committee for Co-operative Medical Service by the president of the District Medical Society. Dr. Neill has offered to co-operate on any plan of the committee "to provide medical care for persons and families of low income" which is "legal, ethical and economically sound."

The emphasis falls on the phrase "low income." This, coupled with the fact that the committee recently revised its membership to admit the general public, appears to have inspired the medical society's cordiality. Insinuations that the society acted to head off the proposed Congressional inquiry do gross injustice to the integrity of the medical fraternity.

Two months ago the medical society at a public meeting described its position on the growing problem at issue. Among others, two points were stressed: First, that any medical expense indemnity plan must be restricted to low income groups; second, that such a plan must consider the public as a whole, not any single group.

The GHA venture, since it puts no income limitation on its membership and since its facilities are available to only certain Government employes, runs counter to these principles. The new Washington Committee for Co-operative Medical Service, in contrast, is concerned with the public generally and moreover, appears to be concentrating its studies on "low income" groups. It thus has won the medcial society's support.

The public, wearied and somewhat disturbed by the fury of the GHA argument, will welcome this sign of coming peace in medical and social ranks. When the dust settles, perhaps both groups will be in a mood to discuss the so-called "Brattleboro plan." To judge from the slight descriptions of it heard in the city to date this represents a very rational approach to the problem of spreading medical costs equitably.

Pacifism In Decline.

Because of his personal integrity, as well as his long years of public service, attention is always paid to Senator Norris when he speaks on any subject of national importance. And what is true generally, should be particularly pronounced in regard to the remarks on national defense problems which Mr. Norris makes in the current issue of The United States News.

The Nebraskan is now the only survivor of the group of six Senators who, twenty-one years ago next week, voted against the entry of the United States into the World War. While he "would vote the same now as I did then" Senator Norris, nevertheless, expresses the belief that "there is more justification for a declaration of war today than in 1917." He sees "outlawry replacing justice and reason in other parts of the world." And he recognizes that "sooner or later we may have to face it."

Just because of his intellectual honesty there is something infinitely pathetic in the changing viewpoint of this veteran isolationist. As an opponent of American membership in the League of Nations, and as one who always opposed any American commitments in behalf of its peace system, the Senator should logically be well satisfied today. The Treaty of Versailles is torn to ribbons. The 1919 settlements, just or unjust, are very largely liquidated. And the "have-not" powers, on which so much American sympathy has been lavished, are rectifying the balance in their favor about as speedily as is physically possible.

Yet Senator Norris, in common with thousands of other pacifist isolationists, is worried. Those of this persuasion are beginning to see, a little late in the day, that the League of Nations really stood for something vital. They see, and the more honest of them are beginning to admit, that while the Geneva system could never have threatened our security its collapse does exactly that. Considering how much American antipathy there once was to the League of Nations it might seem curious that its decline and fall have aroused so little satisfaction in the isolationist camp.

Senator Norris now helps to explain the anomaly. Observing the unrestrained spread of totalitarian doctrines he is farsighted enough to realize that the Western Hemisphere is anything but immune. He notes that "a combination of nations, such as Japan, Italy and Germany, might well change the map of Europe overnight." And he notes further that force alone is all that can stop them "from conquering the rest of the world."

Senator Norris is unquestionably right in recognizing that the day of the American pacifist is ended and that the isolation we have maintained is of so little value that the United States must now prepare to join the mad race in armaments. The tragedy lies in his failure to realize earlier that breakdown of the collective peace system would inevitably insure that result.

Partly through pacifist influence the United States refused to join the now vanished coalition of democracies which sought to stabilize peace. The memory of that is not going to help American pacifism in face of the rising coalition which worships aggrandizement through force.

Good Work In The House.

Increased Congressional interest in Washington's crime problem is indicated by the ease with which the anti-numbers racket bill slipped through the House yesterday. Under ordinary circumstances the opposition of Chairman Palmisano, of the District Committee, would probably have meant defeat of the bill. The chorus of approval which drowned out his objections should be sufficient warning to gamblers that the heydey of the "numbers game" here is over.

The Senate will undoubtedly concur in the House amendment to the bill, since it is intended to facilitate enforcement of the law against "big shots" who reap enormous profits from the bets of gullible persons. Under this provision copies of numbers bets will be dangerous possessions. If the police can make effective use of this weapon to drive out of business the racketeers now preying upon the credulous, they will rid the city of a prolific source of more serious crime.

Mr. Palmisano has brought no credit upon himself by an opposition which has long delayed this sensible and strongly-supported local measure. His complaint as to the search and seizure provisions of the bill has been carefully analyzed and found unwarranted. The nature of the police power has not been changed in any respect. It has merely been extended so as to operate against numbers racketeers as well as burglars, bootleggers, and other criminals.

The fact that other members of the House were sufficiently interested in the bill to force it out of the pigeonhole where it had long been lodged is especially heartening to the District. And the overwhelming approval of the measure on the floor indicates that the House has a greater interest in the welfare of the Capital City than it is sometimes given credit for.

The Jefferson Memorial.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I read with interest The Post's excellent editorial of March 27, "The Trees Are Still There." But is it possible that the battle to keep the cherry trees and the Tidal Basin intact must be fought all over again?

A year ago when the public learned just in time of the monstrous plan to destroy this world-famous beauty spot in the name of a memorial to Thomas Jefferson—who was perhaps our foremost exponent of civic and natural beauty—a storm of indignation arose that was not confined to Washington alone but swept the country.

In public hearings that were finally secured on this public matter before the library committee of the House not one valid reason appeared for the determination of Representative John J. Boylan, chairman of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial Commission, to fill up the Tidal Basin with a gigantic heap of masonry when better locations readily suggested themselves, such as unreclaimed sections of Rosslyn, the approach to Arlington, or the gas house region on this side of the river where an eye-sore might be replaced and not a beauty spot destroyed.

The effort to create the impression that the location of a monument in the Tidal Basin would carry out and complete some hypothetical axis contemplated in the L 'Enfant plan was discredited by the simple reminder of Miss Harlean James that in the time of L 'Enfant the entire Tidal Basin area and the land around it was part of the Potomac River.

Perhaps the most significant fact that emerged from these hearings was that the $3,000,000 already authorized to pay for a memorial to Thomas Jefferson would pay for only the already planned structure. If it were placed in the Tidal Basin, additional millions would be required for a foundation, as it would be necessary to go about 90 feet to strike bottom.

Now, a year later, after various secret sessions of Mr. Boylan's committee, from which the public and the press have been arbitrarily excluded, we are once again favored with the news of Mr. Boylan's persistent determination to locate this pile of concrete and cement in the Tidal Basin. True, it has been moved over from the center of the rim but apparently it is still virtually in the Tidal Basin; it evidently still calls for destruction of some cherry trees; and presumably it still calls for an additional $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 appropriation to be expended for concrete and cement foundation when solid ground is available all around.

W. J. RUTLEDGE.
Washington, March 27.

Dr. Thorning Is Challenged; Replies.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A few days ago Dr. Thorning, professor at Mount St. Marys College, admonished the 61 Protestant bishops who requested the Catholic Church to use its influence in stopping civilian killings in Spain that they had signed "a statement of probable untruth."

The statement to which he referred was one released on March 20 in New York by the American Friends of Spanish Democracy. In that statement appeared the words "we feel sure that you (the Catholic Church) do not share the expressed view of a man who, claiming to be your spokesman, says with callousness incredible in one of his calling, 'that the day of the noncombatant has vanished.'"

In a formal statement which Dr. Thorning gave to The Post he has denied that he is spokesman for anyone but himself. Furthermore, he challenged "the executives of the so-called American Friends of Spanish Democracy to produce from the record a single speech or radio address of mine which makes either of the claims they mention."

The Washington Friends of Spanish Democracy take up Dr. Thorning's challenge. Four days before his denial that he was a spokesman for anybody but himself, Dr. Thorning was introduced over the Columbia Broadcasting System, station WABC, in the following manner: "Catholic circles have requested time for a speaker to present a different viewpoint. Consequently, at their suggestion, Dr. Joseph F. Thorning, chairman of the department of social sciences at Mount St. Marys College at Emmitsburg, Md., will speak to you at this time."

Regarding the second point. In a letter which he wrote on January 28, 1938, to George Seldes, Dr. Thorning said in part as follows: "Every expert on war, whether a military officer or a college professor or correspondent, admits that the day of the 'noncombatant' has vanished. This is regrettable, but it is a fact frankly to be recognized by students of world affairs."

ELIZABETH WILSON,
Executive Secretary, Washington Friends of Spanish Democracy.
Washington, March 24.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am delighted to answer the Washington Friends of Spanish Democracy since I am a sincere friend of Spanish democracy myself, especially that form of true democratic procedure which permits the public worship of God and the right of trial by jury.

Obviously the Washington Friends of Spanish Democracy fail "to produce from the record a single speech of radio address of mine which makes either of the claims they mention."

To be sure, my critics do offer a continuity script from the Columbia Broadcasting System, but they apparently missed the subsequent repudiation of the interpretation which the New York Friends of Spanish Democracy tried to attach to a radio announcer's introduction.

On the night of March 23, 1938, introducing the Hon. Byron N. Scott, United States Representative from California, the Columbia Broadcasting System announced from station WJSV, Washington, D. C.: "In view of a misunderstanding which has arisen respecting the introduction to Dr. Joseph F. Thorning, chairman of the department of social sciences of Mount St. Marys College, Emmitsburg, Md., the Columbia Broadcasting System wishes to make perfectly clear that Dr. Thorning did not claim to be a spokesman for the Catholic hierarchy nor did the Columbia Broadcasting System make any such claim."

As to the personal letter to Mr. George Seldes, I am perfectly willing to have it quoted, even though Mr. Seldes did not seek my permission for this, provided other passages from our correspondence be cited evidencing my well-known interest, as vice chairman of the social relations committee for the Catholic Association for International Peace, with respect to the protection of civilian population by avoiding the occasion and cause of war.

In the New York Times of Friday, March 25, 1938, Mr. Franklin Folsom, speaking on behalf of the so-called League of American Writers in an ineffectual attempt to refute Mr. Ellory Sedgwick, editor of the Atlantic Monthly, quotes apparently with approval my description of nationalist Spain which appeared in The Washington Post February 15, 1938.

It seems to me that the executives of these two organizations closely associated in their advocacy of the Barcelona regime ought to get together and try to agree whether or not they wish to accept me as a creditable witness.

The Canal's Future.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Two years ago, when a plan was being hatched to grab the C. & O. Canal and create another "speed highway" this correspondent cut loose some thoughts upon the fat-headed scheme. There seemed nothing inconsistent to the promoters—promoting speed in one direction, trying to curb it in another. The canal conversion mania was national, but in some sections, such as the Hennequin (a cutoff from the Mississippi to the Illinois rivers), improvement not conversion was tried, with increased traffic, employment and salvage of a fine region.

Acquirement of our canal area by the Government, with management by the Park Commission, now seemingly put through, can become a great curse or great virtue.

A curse, if grandiose plans such as have ruined and artificialized half the parks, are put into effect; if motor cars are allowed to dominate the park, except touch it at strategic points.

A virtue, if made a haven for that now negligible number (except for a few Boy Scouts and old-timers) who know the value of exercising their own engine instead of one made in Detroit; if the fine art of bicycling, its pleasures and values known to 200,000,000 Europeans, attains its natural growth here, with stopover facilities for long trippers. It can be made one spot where the foot slogger doesn't have to fight a loud horn attached to a motorcar; a health asset causing people to patronize doctors to check up their merits, not determine what new thing modern living and too much motorcar has done to their abused and torpid carcases.

The plan to restore the canal to Seneca or above is excellent. Restoration, tree-planting, grass-cutting, maintenance should be the object, not 8 to 12-foot walks, concrete works and freakish nonsense from sacred blueprints. Properly handled, left natural not overdeveloped, this region can be made Washington's greatest asset for the non-represented class, the nonmotorist, or motorist trying to struggle free of the car disease . . . The motorist already monopolizes everything else, including the rest of residence sections by virtue of his all-night horn.

To assume the day of canals is over may be premature. If a half-efficient canal company with a few boats operated along the C. & O. today with only a little promotion or perhaps none at all, canning, textile, millwork and small manufactories would be springing up along it. And with the decline of the motor age a decade or two hence, who knows? I. H. LATIMER.

Bread Loaf Weights.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Charles J. Beck, a Virginia baker, appearing before the Senate committee investigating monopoly and the O'Mahoney-Borah bill for licensing corporations, on March 24, brought out the fact that the citizens of Washington are receiving a 16-ounce loaf of bread for 9 cents while the citizens of Virginia are receiving a 20-ounce loaf of bread for the same price.

It was brought out in the hearing, to which I have referred herein, that the Washington bakers were producing both sizes of loaves in their Washington bakeries, selling the small 16-ounce loaf for 9 cents in the District of Columbia and the large 20-ounce loaf for 9 cents in the State of Virginia, after hauling it a round-trip distance of nearly 200 miles.

If the citizens of Washington had a vote, this discrepancy would not long continue, as the proper authorities of the District, obedient to their duties to their voting constituents, would undoubtedly hold an investigation and determine publicly whether the voters were being robbed of the 25 per cent of all bread purchased by them or not.

Certainly there is no reason why the citizens of Richmond, Va., should be getting balloon-size loaves of bread while the citizens of Washington are getting peanut-size loaves. AMOS V. PANKEY.

The Post Impressionist

Perpetuum Mobile.

A BROKER in celestial realty—from Hungary, wasn't he?—recently sold several hundred "lots in Heaven" to his countrymen before the State stopped his pious fraud. And there is another high-minded chap, right here in Washington, who weekly garners a splendid "take" through the sale of "Hell Fire Insurance" certificates, garishly embellished with flames and flying Plutonian cherubs.

So now we are ready to believe anything about the credulity of our fellow man. The recent newspaper story, then, of one Charles Hammons, New York ex-sailor who sold $37,000 worth of "certificates of ownership" in an "electrical machine that would require no source of energy for operation," to citizens of Manhattan, Brooklyn, and thereabouts, does not even provoke a "Humph!" The account nonetheless serves to introduce a little essay upon Perpetuum Mobile.

In the case of applications received today for devices which are apparently striving for perpetual motion, the procedure is routine. A form letter is returned immediately in answer to the application.

"Replying to your recent letter," it reads, "you are advised that the Patent Office understands the term 'perpetual motion' to mean a mechanical motion creating energy, that is, a machine doing work and operating without the aid of any power other than that which is generated by the machine itself, and which, when once started will operate for an indefinite time.

"The views of the office are in accord with those of the scientists who have investigated the subject, and are to the effect that mechanical perpetual motion is a physical impossibility. These views can be rebutted only by the exhibition of a working model. Many persons have filed applications for patent on perpetual motion, but such applications have been rejected as inoperative and opposed to well-known physical laws, and in no instance has the requirement of the Patent Office for a working model ever been complied with.

"In view of these facts the office will not now permit such an application to be filed without a model, and this practice has been adopted in order to save applicants the loss of the fees paid with their applications. After an application for patent has been considered by the examiner the filing fee of $30 cannot be returned."

This letter, pointed and kindly at the same time, ought to stop them. But it doesn't. More often than not, pages and pages of correspondence, affidavits, newspaper clippings and closely written charts and figures follow this letter, back to the "Hon. Commissioner of Patents."

In answer to this flood of protest and explanation on the part of the inventor, a second semiform letter is sent out, often bolstered with specific rebuttal and argument of the applicant's "proof" of his device.

"Patents are granted," reads this one, "because of the contributions which the inventors are supposed to make to the progress of science and the useful arts. When, therefore, an application is made for a patent of an alleged invention based on principles which run counter to such a well-recognized law as that of the conservation of energy, the office is justified in holding that the applicant has not complied with the statutory requirement of showing that his invention is sufficiently useful and important to warrant the grant of a patent therefore, until he has shown that the invention is capable of operation.

"If this case were taken up by the examiner for consideration as to its merits, his first action would be a rejection on the ground of inoperativeness for any useful purpose.

"The office hesitates to accept the filing fee from applicants who believe they have discovered perpetual motion and deems it only fair to give such applicants a word of warning that fees paid cannot be recovered after the case has been considered by the examiner. For these reasons it has been thought best to meet the inventor at the threshold of the office and give him an opportunity to recover the moneys paid into the office.

"In regular order of examination this case will be reached in about four months from this date.

"If applicant does not desire to have the case considered by the examiner he should immediately return the filing receipt bearing the serial number with a request that a filing fee of $30 be refunded."

Even this does not deter many from allowing their applications to go on to the examiner. They have staked their all on what they consider to be an answer to one of the world's unsolvable problems.

In such cases (and there is sure to be another volume of correspondence between this letter and) a third letter sent to the applicant the "final rejection." This is made on the same grounds from which the applicant has seen fit to appeal from letter No. 2. It is similar in tone and content, and will, in the majority of cases, contain further patient general and mathematical explanation to the inventor of the reasons why his device is impractical.

After the third letter has gone to the inventor, the case automatically is filed in the "abandoned" cases of the office, and nothing further happens. Nothing, that is, as far as the office is concerned, although there may follow, for years, a stream of letters from the thwarted inventor.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler.

Judge Landis.

TODAY'S LESSON will be a little lecture addressed particularly to young reporters, feature writers and students of journalism. It will make the point that when a journalist falls down on an assignment to see somebody about something he has no occasion to ridicule the subject of his quest in print. In fact, such copy, however brightly done, is an admission that the reporter has missed one, an abuse of power and a knock on a calling which is busy enough dodging and catching half-bricks thrown by outsiders, and often with very good aim.

PEGLER.

I am thinking of a merry but plainly impatient criticism of the personal habits and office hours of Judge K. M. Landis, the so-called commissioner of baseball, because a reporter in Florida could not find him by telephone to interview him regarding some question involving the St. Louis Cardinals. The author is a well-known and gifted sport writer for the papers and magazines who will recognize the incident and may want to see me after class for private counsel.

* * * *

NOW, the old Judge's position and some of his decisions are peculiar. He disqualified himself before he ever opened court, for he is employed by the baseball magnates to decide cases where their interests clash with those of the players who pay him nothing. He is the bosses' judge, and there are no two ways about them, although it must be said that in several notable cases he has decided against the bosses to their great loss and in favor of his fellow wage-slaves to their great profit. That point and his theatrical mannerisms—for the old Judge does like to hem it a bit—his golf and his office hours, if any, are legitimate subjects for comment in cold blood or in his biography or obituary. But they are no excuse for a reporter's failure to get a story, and an attempt to use them in lieu of sound results on an assignment is not allowable.

The most conscientious reporters sometimes get assignments on which they simply cannot make good, but the papers call that the luck of the game and skip it. Once, when Nicky Arnstein was hiding out from the New York police and dozens of reporters spent weeks trying to scoop the gallant officers, the search became a subject of daily reports in the papers, but they were done in good humor and at the expense of the reporters as well as the police.

The journalists were as much embarrassed as the stalwart guardians when it turned out that Donald Henderson Clarke, of the old World, had Nicky covered up all the time waiting to drive him past the reviewing stand at the head of the annual police parade. And often a reporter's bitter personal anger and humiliation over wantonly insulting treatment are entirely suppressed in the noncommittal line, "Mr. Smith refused to discuss the matter with the press."

* * * *

THE ESSAY on Judge Landis also argues that the Judge dislikes newspapermen, which is neither here nor there, and, moreover, isn't entirely true, as I shall demonstrate. Public figures do not have to like newspapermen to maintain their right to fair treatment. Many newspapermen themselves joyously detest certain others. And most sport writers know that in some of the most spectacular brawls of the last ten years between individual ball players and individual reporters, the reporters were loud and exasperating alcoholics whose conduct had long embarrassed the rest. That was one reason, among others, why the sports writers did not gang up on the players and silence them out of the game.

Not conceding that it is pertinent whether the old Judge likes or loathes newspapermen, I will declare that he went to great trouble and no little personal expense and obligation in recent years to get jobs for two broke and despairing newspapermen who had been forgotten by their colleagues, and that once, when he was on the Federal bench, he hocked his own life insurance to meet a crisis in the life of a cub reporter in Chicago who has since achieved success and has never forgotten the old mane-shaker's kindness.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Wilhelm And Adolf.

Adolf.—Well, what do you think of my performance, now?

Wilhelm.—You're doing things on such a grand scale that I'm terribly depressed.

Adolf (surprised).—Depressed? What's there depressing about a grand program, great plans, colossal achievements?

Wilhelm (with a sorrowful look at the Doorn scenery). You'll find out.

* * * *

Adolf.—There's nothing to it! I strike quickly, and it's all over. Force triumphs every time.

Wilhelm.—It's nice of you to quote me.

Adolf.—I'm not quoting you.

Wilhelm.—Oh yes, you are!

* * * *

Adolf.—Don't you thrill to what has happened? A helpless Germany has become a giant . . . A prostrate Deutschland has risen once more to become the most feared nation in all Europe . . .

Wilhelm.—The most feared nation? I, too, used to think that was a desirable goal.

Adolf.—Well, isn't it?

Wilhelm.—Take a good look at me, Adolf, and draw your own conclusions.

* * * *

Adolf.—Oh, things are different today. We live in a new world. We don't have to go by the old rules.

Wilhelm.—I remember Bismarck's telling me that. You've heard of Bismarck?

Adolf.—Vaguely. I don't care for those small-timers. As I was saying when another voice disturbed me, it's a different age. No great nation can remain crushed to earth. Injustices are always corrected. Understand?

Wilhelm (with a glance at the woodpile).—Hardly. I've been here 20 years and still no return ticket.

Adolf.—There's a new setup . . . The countries that used to be dangerous have gone soft. The day when England had to be reckoned with is over.

Wilhelm.—I hope you're right, but it's very easy to be wrong there. Do I know it! ! !

Adolf.—John Bull is a stumbling, fumbling old fat man. I tweek his nose, I box his ears, I spit in his face. And he takes it lying down!

Wilhelm.—I'm never so nervous about John Bull as when he is lying down. He has a way of getting up so fast it makes you dizzy.

Adolf.—Make ME dizzy?

Wilhelm.—Well, anyhow, he made me dizzy. Remember this, England may sleep before a war but she never sleeps during one.

* * * *

Adolf.—She's through as a great power. France is divided. Italy is on my side. This is Germany's hour.

Wilhelm.—I admire your brashness, but you really ought to read history.

Adolf.—I MAKE history.

Wilhelm.—I don't want to discourage you but remember, Adolf, Napoleon made history . . . and so did I.

* * * *

Adolf.—I'm afraid of nobody on earth. Germany is top dog. I am determined to be boss of all Europe.

Wilhelm.—It's nice work . . . if you can get it.

* * * *

Adolf.—Well, I'll see you again some time.

Wilhelm.—Yes. And I'll save you a bucksaw!

The law in New York now requires a blood test of both parties before a marriage license will be issued. It just goes to show that the first 300 years of trying to pass intelligent legislation are the hardest.

Quezon Shifts

Philippine President Tempers Early Cry For Absolute Independence, Favoring Now Dominion-like Status.

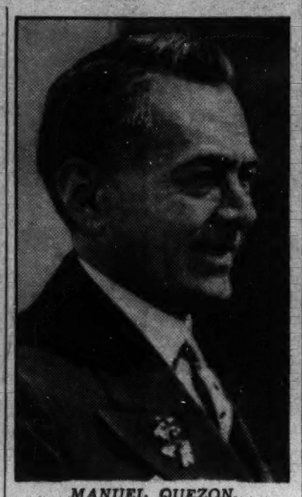
By Vicente Albano Pacis.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Manila.

MANUEL L. QUEZON, president of the Philippines, has made it known that, personally, he would forego independence provided America is ready to give the Filipinos the fullest political autonomy and the fairest possible trade privileges in the American market.

He made this statement as his comment on a radio speech broadcast from Washington by United States High Commissioner McNutt who advocated "a permanent political and economic relationship" between America and the Philippines.) Quezon described the autonomy that he had in mind by comparing it to the status of a dominion, but added that perhaps America would never make such a concession to the Filipinos on the ground that she has always demanded powers in the Philipppines commensurate with her responsibilities.



MANUEL QUEZON.

The concession from the Filipino side, however, is significant being from the same man who used to say, "Better a government run like hell by Filipinos than a government run like heaven by Americans." From a fiery nationalist just a decade ago, Quezon has gone through a sort of evolution until today he has become so conservative that he speaks, though by inferences, of a desire to remain permanently under American sovereignty.

Responsibility Has Softened Radicalism.

THE RESPONSIBILITY of office, extensive travel, the Japanese invasion of China, and the new imperialistic doctrines of the totalitarian states seem to have conspired together to modify his nationalistic ideas. When he was just a nationalistic leader demanding concessions from an American governor general and the American Congress, he could afford to be radical. He knew that if he demanded "immediate, complete and absolute independence" he would get much less.

Now that he is the head of the Philippine government which, under a congressional independence law, will become completely independent in 1946, he is naturally hedging. The fast aproach of 1946, which seems to be in rhythm with the fast-changing maps of Europe and the Orient, appears to overwhelm him.

Quezon is impulsively imitative. Following a brief travel to Mexico two years ago, he returned to Manila to inaugurate an agrarian reform program in imitation of that of President Cardenas. He was convinced that the big landed estates in the Islands were to be the source of trouble in the future and forthwith decided to eliminate them.

But while he is still in the stage of negotiating for the purchase of some of them, out of money refunded as sugar and cocoanut oil taxes by the American Treasury, reports from Mexico indicate that the Cardenas agrarian program has come to a stalemate due to lack of money with which to start off the erstwhile peons now become landowners. If Quezon is certain of continued American sovereignty over the Philippines, he may soon decide that the breaking up of the haciendas is, after all, not a necessary peace measure.

Quezon Affected By Totalitarian Success.

IT IS EVIDENT that the Filipino President has been profoundly affected by the current territorial aggrandizements of the totalitarian states. Mussolini conquers Abyssinia, Hitler annexes Austria, and Japan is still gobbling up China. Quezon fears and McNutt warned that following Philippine independence, a wave of immigration to the islands will follow, mainly from Asia, but perhaps also from the other crowded totalitarian nations in Europe. Such an immigration, McNutt predicted, would lead to the Filipino's racial extinction. It is possible that in Quezon's mind it has a different significance; namely, that a few million Japanese, Italians, Germans may lead to a repetition of the Austrian coup on the ground such citizens are entitled to the protection of their home governments.

These possibilities, at any rate, are prominent considerations in the current calculations involving the future of the Philippines. At this stage, it appears that the Quezon goal is a dominion or a protectorate status. What he apparently wants to asure is continued American interest in the Philippines, and what he expects to gain by this is protection of the Philippines in the event of necessity.

It is also apparent that he may seek to insure continued American interest in two ways. First, by encouraging the new American desire to remain permanently in the Orient, offering naval bases and perhaps military outposts in the Philippines to the United States permanently. Second, by attracting American investment and businessmen to the islands. Under the independence law, America is to give up all her military reservations in 1946, but negotiations as to the final disposition of the American naval bases in the Philippines will still have to take place. The negotiations may well include reopening of the case of the military reservations also. If America were to convert Cavite into a base as formidable as Singapore or Pearl Harbor, and keep several military outposts besides, Philippine security from without would be well safeguarded. And if such base and outposts could be made to appear as the signs of America's remaining in the Orient, they would probably be easier for American taxpayers to bear and the Filipinos to accept.

U. S. Capital Sought By Philippines Today.

THE EFFORT to attract American capital and men is evident in the negotiations going on between the Commonwealth and the Standard Vacuum Oil Co. Proposed special legislation, under which this American firm would have exclusive rights to prospect for oil over vast specified areas for many years, is now pending in the Philippine Assembly. Not only is it a special legislation but it contains provisions admittedly contrary to the corporation law but which would be legalized as special cases. Compared to the refusal some 15 years ago to allow Harvey Firestone to plant rubber trees in Mindanao by not allowing him enough land, the present proposed contract is surprisingly liberal.

By his utterances and acts, President Quezon has definitely made it understood that the Philippine question is still open, and that he would not refuse to listen to any proposal that is reasonable.

'Crusading Church' Is Urged to Combat 'Organized' Pagans

"A time-serving, easy-going Christianity is no match for the organized paganism of today," the Rev. Dr. William H. Foulkes, moderator of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, declared last night at Georgetown Presbyterian Church.

"But," he added, "Christianity which takes its Christ seriously will not only be able to save its own soul but to win the world. The church must become afresh a crusading church."

"The minister must do more than stand in his pulpit and announce truth. He must go out among his people who are living in sorrow, doubt and futility," Dr. Foulkes told a gathering of ministers and laymen at New York Avenue Presbyterian Church yesterday morning.

France At Bay

By Barnet Nover.

Gathering Clouds Over Paris.

THE ONCE IMPOSING edifice of power erected by France in the years following the Armistice now lies in ruins about her. But this catastrophic development appears not to have shaken the republic out of its dangerous lethargy. It would almost seem as if the French are reconciled to the thought that their nation has now been reduced to the status of a second-class power.

This happens not to be the first time that France has found herself overshadowed by Germany. That was true for many years following the defeat at Sedan and the humiliating Treaty of Frankfort which ended the Franco-Prussian War.

In those days Bismarck bestrode Europe like a colossus. He deprived France of two valuable provinces, Alsace and Lorraine. Having done that, the Iron Chancellor saw to it that the republic was kept diplomatically isolated, that all of France's potential allies in any contemplated war of revenge were kept tied to the Reich by bonds of friendship.

* * * *

BUT THERE are many points of difference between France's position in the Europe of Bismarck and her plight today. In those days France and Germany were about equal in population, while today the Reich, having absorbed Austria, now has 70 per cent more inhabitants than her western rival.

In those days the French showed a very remarkable recuperative power. The loss of Alsace-Lorraine was compensated by a vast increase in France's colonial domain in Africa and Asia. Above all France did not then suffer, as she does today, from an intense defeatism amounting almost to hopelessness.

This mood may not last. It would be extraordinary if it did last. But in the meantime there is no mistaking the fact that the dictators are on the march. Since Hitler tore up the disarmament clauses of the Versailles Treaty, the French have suffered one serious blow after another and their feeble efforts to prevent these calamities have all proved in vain.

* * * *

WITH AS GOOD grace as possible France has had to acquiesce in the rearmament of Germany, the weakening of the Franco-Polish alliance, the remilitarization of the Rhineland, Fascist intervention in Spain, the annexation of Austria by the Third Reich.

Now she faces the possibility of the immobilization of Czechoslovakia through persistent German pressure, the destruction of the Little Entente and last but not least the establishment on her southern flank of a regime allied with Berlin and Rome. The French cup of humiliation is thus full to overflowing.

And yet, in the face of these events, France remains frozen in immobility. To be sure, a definite pledge has been given to Czechoslovakia that French arms will aid the beleaguered central European republic if and when it is attacked by the Third Reich. But since the remilitarization of the Rhineland that pledge has less value than it once would have had. Besides, Hitler may achieve his aims with regard to Czechoslovakia by other means than a military invasion.

* * * *

HOW EXPLAIN French fatalism?

From a military point of view France happens to be in a very strong position. Her army is at the very peak of efficiency. Her air force is one of the largest in Europe. Her naval strength is not inconsiderable. And despite British shilly-shallying regarding European affairs the fact remains that Britain is France's ally—on the Rhine by consent, elsewhere by the inescapable force of circumstances.

To be sure, France's financial situation is parlous and her economy is at present being subjected to very considerable strains. But these should be but temporary phenomena. They constitute difficulties that can easily be overcome once the nation pulls itself together.

But it is precisely at this point that France is weakest. Not even the catastrophic events of the past month have brought about that union of parties which Frenchmen crave but which powerful French politicians are not prepared to permit.

That is why Premier Blum's efforts to form a broad-guaged government have met with failure. Everybody in France happens to want such a regime. But while the Left is willing to co-operate with the Right, certain elements of the Right, representing only a small minority of the electorate, insist that the price of their co-operation is that they be empowered to dictate the policy of a government of national union.

WITHOUT intending a pun it can be said with truth that the Right in France has almost invariably been wrong in matters of foreign policy. They threw Clemenceau in the discard because they believed he had been too lenient toward Germany! They insisted on the payment of reparations to the last impossible penny. They viewed the Weimar Republic as merely a false front hiding the old regime. Through Poincare they were responsible for the disastrous Ruhr occupation. They fought the Austro-German customs union.

Ultimately their attitude changed but their new point of view has been as ruinous to France as was the one they maintained in the years following the World War. They have fought the Franco-Russian alliance. They practically threatened Blum with civil war if he allowed his sympathies for the Spanish loyalists to influence government policy. With some honorable exceptions they have steadfastly placed class interests above national interests. And while in a political minority their economic power is such that they have been able to hamstring successive Popular Front governments.

It is a tragic situation. And it finds its parallel in Great Britain. Thus the totalitarian states, while inherently weak, have been able to ride roughshod over their more powerful rivals. Allied to each other they also have allies in the camp of the democratic states and by no means the least powerful of these allies is the French Right.

Number Mad

By David Ewen

Bets At Monte Carlo.

THE ROULETTE WHEEL has made Monte Carlo perhaps the most number-conscious community in the world. People there have ever-alert eyes for numbers between one and 36; they are always searching for portents, omens, indications from above which will reveal to them which number will be favored by fate at the casino that day. Generally, people bet on the day of the month, the number of the hotel room, or their age.

Motor car licenses, when they have a striking repetition of one digit, will frequently inspire people to borrow that number for the day. When, during the last automobile sweepstake race in Monte Carlo, car No. 2 came in first there was a preponderance of betting on that number that evening at the casino; and by a curious coincidence No. 2 appeared frequently on every roulette wheel.

I have known people to sit quietly at the cafe sipping an apertif when, suddenly, they perceived a number on the lapel of the waiter; without the hesitation of a moment, they rose to their feet and rushed to the casino to make a bet on the number.

One of the most amusing incidents in Monte Carlo concerns this indefatigable pursuit for lucky numbers among Monte Carlo inhabitants. It was noticed at the English church that every Sunday morning the church would be crowded until the preacher announced the number of the hymn to be sung; whenever the number was below 36, the church would instantly become half-empty.

Mice And Men

Dr. Maud Slye, famed pathologist, of Chicago, reports a trifle wistfully that she has been unable to discover a strain of mice that can live on a human diet of cocktails, highly seasoned foods and hot foods and cold drinks. To our perhaps unlettered mind, this seems to prove that men are not mice and vice versa. We shall leave severely alone any questions as to what many men are in relation to their wives, for Dr. Slye is not a psychologist.

In the obverse, we imagine, Dr. Slye might not discover any strain of men that could live on rat-trap cheese, stale bread crumbs, chewed paper, bits of currency, bacon rind, and the other standard articles of a mouse's diet.

Austria Seizure Not U. S. Affair, Borah Asserts

Senator Attacks Theory of Democratic Union to Stop Fascists.

Hitler's seizure of Austria "is not of the slightest moment to the United States as a Government," said Senator William E. Borah (Republican), of Idaho, last night in an attack on the theory of "co-operation" by democratic governments against the totalitarian states.

In an address broadcast over an N. B. C. network, the veteran advocate of Jefferson's policy of "friendship with all nations, entangling alliances with none," traced the world's unrest and conflict to "the vindictive fatuousness" of the Versailles Treaty and maintained that "our supreme and imperative task is here at home."

"Unemployment Is Real Peril."

Borah, whose utterances on foreign affairs are regarded here and abroad with deepest respect, insisted that no departure from the traditional foreign policy of nonentanglement and nonintervention was called for in the present set of world crises.

He emphasized that the problems of democracy are primarily at home, rather than abroad, saying:

"Democracies are bleeding inwardly. The healing is not to be found in armaments, but in bringing contentment, happiness and prosperity to the harried, confused and discouraged citizen.

"There is greater danger to our democracy in that vast army of unemployed encamped in every city, town and village throughout the land, in that 50,000,000 men, women and children living in constant sight of the poverty line, poorly clad and poorly fed, in the hundreds of thousands, with the number increasing every year, of malformed and rickety children, of the 5,000,000 girls and boys who leave colleges and universities finding no avenue in which to engage their energies, their genius—more danger here by far than in any fleet of battleships which any nation, or group of nations, may choose to send against us."

Calls Seizure Inevitable.

Borah said the Versailles and related treaties "affronted every principle of justice and challenged the deepest passion of the human heart, that of nationality. It soon brought Europe to a state of bitter unrest and shortly to hunger and want and unspeakable suffering upon the part of the masses.

"The Versailles Treaty is the mother of modern armaments. There has been no peace in Europe since it was written."

Passing to the Austrian seizure, he said: "It is a sad and stirring thing to see a once great nation—the vast estate of Maria Teresa—pass under the domination of another power. But if you begin your study of the event with the signing of the Versailles Treaty, that which happened to Austria would appear natural, logical, inevitable.

"Austria had never been an independent nation, except in name, since she escaped from the operating table at Versailles. It was there she was robbed of her wealth, most of her natural resources, and deprived of every means by which she could hope to become and remain an independent nation."

"The Versailles Treaty has many crimes for which it must give account, but none more futile and brutal than its crime against Austria.

"It is nothing less than a flimsy piece of transparent acting for those nations who joined in committing that first crime to seek to make a great world tragedy of the fact that the nation thus outraged has come under a new master.

"Austria cannot possibly receive a harsher treatment at its hands than it received in the first instance at the hands of its friends."

Hungary's Debt

Senators Doubtful As to Precedent Risk As President, Without Comment, Submits Nation's Proposal to Pay U. S.

By the Associated Press.

Hungary's offer to compromise her post-war obligation to the United States went yesterday to the Senate, where the reaction was a mixture of sympathy and wariness.

Some Senators indicated they would like to accept the offer, but were anxious lest it be a precedent for another scaling down of war debts, incurred by other countries.

Hungary's offer, in brief, was to pay all of her original obligation of $1,685,835, but no interest. President Roosevelt, in transmitting it to the Senate, made no recommendation, but urged "most careful consideration."

The President took pains to emphasize that it was a "relief debt"—incurred to feed famished people in Hungary after the war—and therefore could not be classed with war debts.

Senator La Follette (Progressive), of Wisconsin, said he would not be "hard-boiled" in considering a "relief debt," but wished to satisfy himself "whether or not this offer has any bearing on our policy toward war debts."

"It's nonsense to send the proposal up at this time," said Senator Johnson (Republican), of California. "There is nothing we can or ought to do about it."

Senator George (Democrat), of Georgia, another member of the Finance Committee, said he was "disposed in some way to liquidate the war debts."

Under the proposal, Hungary would pay $1,207,000 in 30 annual installments. This represents the principal, less the $478,000 in interest and principal already paid.

The President's message to Congress on the Hungarian debt proposal follows:

I transmit herewith, for the consideration of the Congress, a communication from the Minister of Hungary on the relief indebtedness of Hungary to the United States, in which the Hungarian government tentatively formulates for the consideration of the American Government a possible basis for a new debt arrangement between the two countries to replace completely the debt agreement of 1924 and accruals thereunder.

The indebtedness of the government of Hungary to the Government of the United States is not a war debt, but is properly designated as a relief debt, having been contracted in May, 1920, under the authority of the act of March 30, 1920, which authorized the United States Grain Corporation, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, to sell or dispose of flour in its possession for cash or on credit at such prices and on such terms or conditions as considered necessary to relieve the populations in the countries of Europe, or countries contiguous thereto, suffering for the want of food. The American Relief Administration acted as the fiscal agent of the United States Grain Corporation in dispensing this relief.

The original indebtedness, the principal amount of which was $1,685,835.61, with interest accrued thereon from May, 1920, to December, 1923, at the rate of 4½ per cent per annum, was funded as of the latter date, by agreement made in April, 1924, into bonds of Hungary in the aggregate principal amount of $1,939,000, maturing serially in the succeeding years for 62 years, bearing 3 per cent for the first ten years and thereafter at the rate of 3½ per cent per annum. In approving this debt settlement, the Congress authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to subordinate the lien of the bonds taken under it to the lien of the Hungarian reconstruction loan, which was about to be issued and sold in numerous countries, including the United States. In May, 1924, the secretary, acting upon this authorization, formally subordinated the American Government's lien to the lien of the reconstruction bond issue.

Suspended in 1931.

On December 23, 1931, the Hungarian government proclaimed a transfer moratorium suspending payment in foreign currencies of all Hungarian foreign obligations, public and private, except the aforesaid reconstruction loan of 1924. Payments on the latter loan were subsequently suspended in part. During 1937, the Hungarian government began liquidating the transfer moratorium by negotiating agreements with the foreign holders of Hungarian obligations for the acceptance of reduced payments in full satisfaction of existing indebtedness. It is in this connection that the Hungarian government has now come forward of its own initiative in an effort to reach an agreement with the United States Government under which the relief indebtedness can also be discharged in full.

No readjustment of the terms of payment of the Hungarian indebtedness to the United States can be made except pursuant to act of Congress. The Hungarian government is seeking a definitive readjustment of the terms of payment of this indebtedness on the basis of full payment over a period of years of the total original amount borrowed, without interest.

Australian Plan Cited.

The Hungarian government calls attention to the similarity between its suggested basis for payment and that accepted by the United States in the Austrian debt agreement of May 8, 1930, which provided that a sum very slightly in excess of the original Austrian indebtedness incurred in 1920 should be repaid without interest in 40 annuities. The Congress of the United States, after full consideration of the nature of the Austrian indebtedness, voted by a large majority in the House of Representatives and by a unanimous procedure in the Senate, to authorize the signature of the draft agreement which had been prepared by the Treasury Department and the representatives of the Austrian government. The Hungarian debt is a relief debt like the Austrian one.

Consideration Urged.

The Hungarian Minister also suggests that the terms compare favorably with those in several other debt settlements, and that in announcing the signature of the debt agreement with Austria in 1930, the Secretary of Treasury said:

"The settlement compares favorably with the settlements made by the United States with the governments of Greece, Italy and Yugoslavia."

It has, of course, been the consistent policy of the United States to consider each debt in the light of the circumstances of the debtor government, and it is with this in view that the Hungarian communication is transmitted to the Congress.

I believe the proposals of the Hungarian government should receive the most careful consideration of the Congress. They represent a noteworthy wish and effort of the Hungarian government to meet its obligations to this Government.

In its simplest terms, the offer of the Hungarian government is to repay to the United States the whole of the relief loan but without payment of any interest thereon.

Holding Company Registration Law Held Legal

veloped by the commission in the past two and one-half years."

Large holding company systems that have been fighting the act began registering shortly after the high court decision, and before business had closed for the day three had registered. They were the large Commonwealth & Southern corporation, the United Corporation and the United Telephone and Electric Corporation of Wilmington, Del.

In another decision involving picketing of a District of Columbia grocery chain by the New Negro Alliance, the Supreme Court voided a lower court injunction restraining the picketing.

The injunction was granted by the District Court for the District of Columbia after members of the alliance sought unsuccessfully to get the company to employ colored workers in managerial and sales positions, and picketed a store on Eleventh street. The Court of Appeals for the District affirmed the decree.

Six Justices Agree.

Justice Roberts and five associates joined in an opinion reversing the lower court rulings, and held in effect that the case grew out of a labor dispute within the meaning of the Norris-LaGuardia act, although "the relation of employer and employe does not exist" between the litigants.

Justice Cardozo did not participate in this decision, but Justices McReynolds and Butler joined in a dissenting opinion, which declared "it seems unbelievable that, in all such circumstances, Congress intended to inhibit courts from extending protection long guaranteed by law and thus, in effect, encourage mobbish interference with the individual's liberty of action."

Justice Roberts in his majority findings said "the desire for fair and equitable conditions of employment on the part of persons of any race, color or persuasion and the removal of discriminations against them by reason of their race or religious beliefs is quite as important to those concerned as fairness and equity in terms and conditions of employment can be to trade or craft unions or any form of labor organization or association."

Other action by the court yesterday:

Upheld in an opinion by Justice Reed, New York City's 3 per cent tax on gross income of utilities to make funds available for unemployment relief. The levy had been challenged by the New York Rapid Transit Corporation, which paid the taxes.

Ruled the Santa Cruz Packing Co., of Oakland, Calif., is subject to provisions of labor relations act, although only 37 per cent of its products are sold across State lines. The majority opinion by Hughes upheld a board order for reinstatement and back pay to workers discharged for union activities. Justices Butler and McReynolds dissented.

Declared unconstitutional an ordinance of Griffin, Ga., requiring persons who distribute circulars or advertisements to obtain a city license. Chief Justice Hughes in the majority ruling said the ordinance "strikes at the very foundation of the freedom of the press by subjecting it to license and censorship."

Agreed to review litigation brought by 21 Senators and three representatives of the Kansas State Legislature and to determine whether the proposed child labor amendment is dead or whether States may still vote on it.

Refused to review constitutionality of the Kerr tobacco act.

Decided the Federal Government has full title to Mare Island, Calif., site of the West Coast Naval Base.

Chief Justice Hughes' opinion in the utility holding company case narrowed the questions at issue down to sections 4(a) and 5 of the holding company act, providing for registration with the SEC and denying the use of interstate instrumentalities to companies which fail to register.

The Electric Bond & Share Co. had challenged validity of the entire act, maintaining the registration and penalty provisions were inseparable from other features, and Constitutional transgressions if the two provisions stand alone.

"It is evident," said Hughes, "that the provisions of section 4(a) and 5 are not so interwoven with the other provisions of the act that there is any inherent or practical difficulty in the separation and independent enforcement of the former, while reserving all questions as to the validity of the latter." He said the court could "find no basis for holding that these provisions cannot be separately enforced if they are valid."

The court rejected as "untenable" the utility holding company's contention that the two sections are unconstitutional.

"To escape the penalty and the enforcing provisions of the decree, all that the defendants have to do is to register with the commission and assume, under section 5, the obligation to file the described registration statement," said Hughes.

The court said there was "no serious controversy" over whether the companies' activities brought them within scope of Congressional authority, and he ruled there was "no ground for a conclusion that the defendant companies which are enjoined are not engaged in activities within the reach of the Congressional power."

Expressing pleasure at the decision, the Securities and Exchange Commission struck a conciliatory tone in its statement and promised assistance to companies seeking clarification of questions arising "as to the precise meaning or application of particular provisions of the act or of the rules thereunder."

"Holding companies may register by filing with the commission a simple notification of registration which may be prepared in a few moments," the statement explained. "The commission's rules allow 90 days thereafter within which to file the more detailed information required by the registration statement."

The SEC expressed a hope that utility leaders will plan among themselves "under the aegis of the commission" toward "integration of systems and simplification of corporate structures and set-ups."

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

Separated for Years, Should Boy and Girl Who Pledged Themselves 'to Wait' Dissolve Promise?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: When I was 17 I met a young man the same age and we fell very much in love. Neither of us had ever been in love before and thought it was the real thing, so we decided that we would wait for each other. It has been two and a half years now since I saw the boy and we have been writing on an average of once a week. For myself, I have never looked at anyone else since I met him, and I can truthfully say that he is the only man I have ever seen that I would marry. I am sure he feels the same about me.

* * * *

He is not in the East and I am not sure when we will see each other again. But I am almost sure we will be together in the summer of 1939. Do you think we are foolish to cling to our devotion after all these years? Do you think we should give it up? Or should we continue to hang on, praying that fate will turn our way at last, after so long a time?

* * * *

These questions have been bothering me a long time now, because I feel it may be robbing him of something not to be free and able to do what he pleases—in other words, have a good time. He says he has no interest in any other girl. Do you think if I stopped writing to him that his devotion would wane and he would adjust himself without too much hurt? Don't think I want to get away from him. I don't, but I feel it might be better for him.

KAY.

The Thing to Do.

DEAR KAY: Your mistake is not in writing to this boy and in cherishing a very special devotion to him, but in failing to round out your life with additional valued social relationships with other boys. You say: "I have never looked at anyone else since I met him, and I can truthfully say that he is the only man I have ever seen that I would marry." Naturally, if you have never looked at another man, you couldn't possibly get interested in another man, which proves exactly nothing about the authenticity of your interest in this particular man.

* * * *

Even though you did promise to "wait for each other," and even though that promise were faithfully kept—as it has been—still there was no necessity for you to adopt a seclusive way of life that amounts to putting on widow's weeds. These years, if normally and wholesomely employed, should be devoted to learning the useful lesson of social adaptability to various types of personalities—a lesson which cannot be learned unless you mingle with contemporary-age men on terms of companionship; and in developing, through cheerful exercise, your latent capacities for fun, affection, understanding, friendship and so on.

* * * *

You are shutting yourself off from so much that contributes to the making of a healthy, happy mind, in attempting to sustain a one-and-only courting relationship through the tenuous medium of correspondence. As a matter of fact, I believe your morbid preoccupation with these more or less foolish questions you have asked is the outgrowth of this unnatural way of life you have been pursuing.

* * * *

If you were leading a gay, busy, fairly exacting social life suited to your years—if you knew one, two, or even half a dozen boys with whom you were on lunching, dancing, walking, talking, swimming, golfing or riding terms—there would be no question in your mind as to what to do about this boy you think you love and cannot see for another year. You would know, simply, that so long as his letters kept coming, he was interested, and you would be looking forward to seeing him again some day as an unpredictable adventure — something that was going to carry its own wallop of delight, or, just possibly, its jolt of disillusionment.

This business of being willing to penalize yourself in order to give the boy a measure of freedom he hasn't asked for and either doesn't want or is already exercising without a by-your-leave, is so much nonsense. Very probably your life is so devoid of any sort of emotional or social drama or excitement or variety that you are attempting to invent conflict and tension in order to relieve the tedium of endless days of treadmill routine. You are bursting with the desire to do something, you scarce know what, and since the only social relationship you can lay claim to is this one, you are embroidering a design which has to do with the far-away youth.

* * * *

What you should do, my dear girl, is to acquire as many beaux at hand as you possibly can, with the distinct understanding—if your conscience requires it—that they are casual companions of the passing moment and that your heart is hopelessly given elsewhere. In proportion as you learn to enjoy life and the society of your fellow creatures of both sexes, so will you add to the range and depth and quality of your personality, making of yourself a girl whose steadfast devotion is proportionately more worth having.

Growing Up Mentally Called Best Youth Aid

Mrs. Greenbie Expounds Theory in Book 'Be Your Age.'

By Malvina Lindsay.

IF YOU are 14 and think life will never come to you, or 30 and feel it is eluding you, or 50—or even 80—and fear it has passed you by, then the remedy is to start in being your age, richly, ripely abundantly.

This philosophy, as set forth by Marjorie Barstow Greenbie, of Washington, in her new book, "Be Your Age," published by Stackpole Sons, has given women a far more potent weapon to fight Father Time than all the beauty aids yet devised. Put into practice, it should take all the sting out of passing birthdays.

However, being your age is something of a technique, in fact the entire art of living, as Mrs. Greenbie brings out. For instance, you may think you are your age—even younger in the eyes of your friends. The probabilities are that you are physically too old for your age and mentally too immature for it. You probably look a lot older than you ought to and act a lot more childish than you should.

The answer then is grow up. And in so doing paradoxically, you will grow younger. Mrs. Greenbie says: "The more childish your minds and spirits are, the faster the body seems to grow old. Hence, really growing up and staying young become one and the same problem."

Be Young—Yet Old.

She also says: "Successful living in our civilization consists in being physically, sexually and in one's social appearance about 10 years younger than the average for one's chronological age, and being about 10 years older than one's chronological age in earning and the spread of one's interests and activities."

Men's—and especially women's—need of mental and emotional security is emphasized throughout the book. The adolescent attitude carried into maturity and old age is responsible for most of the world's ills, believes Mrs. Greenbie. Because of it, people can't get or hold jobs or fit into the economic system; they can't get or hold mates or become successful parents. Because of it, they are frustrated and baffled at every turn of the road and pass into futile and loveless old age.

Worst of all, the 14-year-old predatory mind dominates our economic system, Mrs. Greenbie points out, and has resulted in the rebirth in Germany, Italy and Japan of the militaristic-feudal system that is threatening the peace of the world.

Life Begins at 50.

It is never too early or too late to begin being your age, Mrs. Greenbie most comfortingly asserts. In fact, she goes Dr. Walter Pitkin one better by insisting that life begins at 50 rather than 40, which latter age she says, is only the middle of a period of growing, a time filled with economic and home responsibilities.

"The real finish of a period of growing up, and the real beginning of something beyond, comes in most successful lives much nearer 50," she says. "It may not come until some time after that." She says further: "Up to 25, one is an unfinished person. From 25 to 50 one is a domestic and economic institution; after 50 one is a finished person or nothing."

The period from 25 to 50, Mrs. Greenbie regards as the critical period of life," the roaring arena between the romantic paradise of youth and the Elysian Fields of age." In the management of these years, she points out, depends one's chance of "coming fresh, handsome undaunted and unbreathed to the last great period of real living beyond 50—the time when the great bask in their fame, and the rich in their wealth, the time when the personality revives and comes into its own, the time when bills should have ceased to nag and the family to annoy, the time when one can rule life and not be ruled by it—the time of love's second bloom, and a whole life's harvest. Twenty-five years of such life is a reasonable expectation. Fifty, taking one right up to the end of a century, is not at all impossible."

Critical Ages.

Among the tragic milestones of age that Mrs. Greenbie lists are the end of college when a graduate thinks life is finished, and at 30 when a woman feels she is saying good-by to girlhood. However, she points out that the tendency now is to move this second crisis of life up ten years, from 30 to 40, "the age when men begin really to worry about their careers and which has always been the high point in romance for women." Then there is the so-called "dangerous age" whose spectacular breaks for freedom are occasioned, she thinks, by persons' being unable to grow intelligently out of one life pattern into another.

A large part of the book is devoted to the problems of the "Awkward Age," the period from 16 to 25 when young people are trying to find themselves in the world about them. One of the most important steps in this age, Mrs. Greenbie believes, is "finding the life plan." Every young person, she thinks, ought to face life with "a well-worked out pattern of personal and social adjustment, one flexible and also large and strong enough for grown-up living."

A general recipe for everyone who wants to enjoy being the age he is, says Mrs. Greenbie, is "to squeeze it so dry of love and fun and work and experience and life generally that he is ready to welcome the next age when it coms along.

Today's HEALTH TALK

Some Dieting Facts.

The energy that the body uses is derived from the sugars, the starches and the fats in the food. If the amount of these eaten is more than the amount of energy required, they are converted into body fat and stored. As one tends to increase in weight, effort and exercise is reduced, and less energy is used, so on the same diet more body fat is stored and a vicious circle is established.

Sugar is rapidly absorbed, so are concentrated starches, such as in bread and potatoes, and fat is slowly converted into energy—it tends to be stored as a reserve.

So the prime articles to be avoided in a reducing diet are sugars—including candy and most desserts; starchy foods and fats—including butter, cream, gravies and salad dressings. The dilemma of the reducer is that these are the very things that make food tasty. Most obese persons have a sweet tooth and a gravy tooth—that is why they are obese.

For these articles, substitutes have been devised. Saccharin is a substance 300-500 times sweeter than sugar but without caloric value. The taste of saccharin is, however, not agreeable to all. When cooked for any length of time it turns bitter. Saccharin is prohibited in some States, but careful research has shown that even in large quantities it does no harm to the body.

A substance called "crystallost" is more agreeable to most. Five granules of crystallose equal about one-half grain of saccharin. This will sweeten one pint of rhubarb or one quart of applesauce.

Soy Bean Flour Substitute.

For bread, soy bean flour is a good substitute. Besides having only 2.6 per cent starch, it has many vitamins and minerals. Besides, there is gluten bread, Lister's flour bread, Diaprotein bread, cellu bran, cellu wafers and soy bean grits.

For butter, Lister's Golden Spread is fat-free and food-valueless. I know a number of people who use it regularly and constantly for butter. Cellu soynut butter is a low fat substitute for peanut butter.

Mineral oil salad dressing: One cup mineral oil, one-fourth cup vinegar, teaspoon salt, dash red pepper, teaspoon mustard, dash Worcester sauce, dash catsup.

Mayonnaise: Two egg yolks, one pint mineral oil, one lemon, teaspoon mustard, one teaspoon salt, paprika and Worcester sauce.

Diet for Wednesday.

Breakfast: Prunes with tablespoon only of cream, one slice gluten bread with Golden Spread imitation butter, one cup black coffee.

Dinner: An average sized piece of broiled liver or average helping of broiled chicken, rhubarb (boiled in a double boiler without water, because rhubarb is itself very watery, but with saccharin)—a few strawberries may be served with this—black coffee.

Dinner Guests Warned Not to Bring Children

Fond Mothers Make Terrible Social Blunder and Often Ruin the Party.

By Margaret Wallace

THE PLACE of children in the social scheme is a very definite one, yet many mothers intrude their children on their friends without invitation, as letters received by the department indicate.

"Is it ever correct for mothers to bring their children uninvited to parties?" a Washington hostess inquires. "I have a woman friend of whom I am very fond and wish to include her in my parties, but she often brings her little girl of 6 and a boy of 7. She even brought them to a dinner party we gave recently on the plea that she had no one to leave them with. The dinner was a formal one and of course there was no place for children and I had their dinner served to them in the recreation room downstairs. The mother was constantly hopping up from the table and rushing down to see if the children were being properly fed. After dinner, at nearly 10 o'clock, I suggested that the children be put to take a nap in my room but the mother took them to the drawing room and had them show off their singing and dancing to my guests. Later they fell asleep on the sofa and had to be carried to another room by one of the men guests.

Ruined Luncheon, Too.

"Another time this woman brought her children to a buffet luncheon of a club I belong to and the children not only ate and mingled with the guests but joined in the conversation.

"I have two small children of my own, but I have them eat their dinner and go to their rooms before a formal dinner party. I allow them to come to the drawing room for a short time for daytime entertainments but they are never allowed to talk and I do not allow them to usurp the conversation.

"My husband has suggested that I tell my friend that her children are not invited. He contends that they are in exactly the same class as other uninvited guests at a party."

Very Rude to Bring Them.

It is very rude to bring children to a party to which they have not been invited. Whether they are invited or not, children at a party should never usurp the conversation or be too forward in any way. Of course in these modern days the rule of "Children should be seen and not heard" is obsolete, but no polite child will be too intrusive or insistent in the conversation.

Even the best behaved children often spoil adult parties. Food and conversation for adults is often quite unsuitable for children.

Some hostesses who realize that many of their friends could not come to their parties on account of their children make arrangements for the entertainment of the children, either in a separate part of their house or in another house. This, of course, is not necessary or to be expected. It is never proper to have children in evidence at a formal dinner. Some mothers allow their children to be in the drawing room when the guests arrive for the formal dinner but they should leave before cocktails are served or the guests go into dinner.

In one Washington group of hostesses, all mothers of small children have arrived at an agreement whereby one of the mothers takes turns in arranging for a children's party at her home and inviting the children of all the other guests. This is always at some other home than that of the hostess and therefore the maids from the homes of the guests can assist at the children's party and keep the children safe. Of course this is a day-time or early evening arrangement only.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes

New Yok, March 28.

DURING THE past winter I served 26 very pleasant weeks on a radio program. It was nice, clean work, and I was very sorry when it shut up shop for the season. One of my reasons for being sorry was the fact that it ended my weekly contact with Myra Kingsley, the astrologer. I have known the handsome Myra for several years, and liked her, but it was not until this half-year of association with her that I realized that she is one of my favorite people in this town.

ALICE HUGHES

Her firm belief in the fate-molding of the heavenly bodies is sincere, as is evident in every word she utters, and certainly her present happy and successful life would seem to be a very definite boost for their guidance. But I am ashamed to say that I hardly know one star from Shirley Temple. What I do know is that Myra's deep understanding and ever-present kindness are remarkable and very rare in this town of hurry, bustle and devil take the hindmost. If the astral bodies can do that for a girl, I'm all for more and better stars!

She is the daughter of a distinguished citizen, William M. Kingsley, head of the board of directors of our Union Theological Seminary and board chairman of a big bank. She's married to Howard L. Taylor and they live happily in a nice apartment on the upper East Side.

Right now the local gazettes are giving some space to Myra's new pet, a strange little thing called a Peruvian cavy, which seems to be a wild and shaggy type of guinea pig. His name is "Mr. Jeep"—he whistles when he's hungry, he eats his spinach like a little man and he affords much pleasure and innocent humor to Myra and her guests. I haven't asked Mr. Taylor. There are only six or eight cavies in this country, and none in an American zoo.

I'm mildly interested in Mr. Jeep, but much more interested in Myra Kingsley, so rare are her warm, human qualities among the women I meet. Kindness and understanding, how often do we find them? Cavy or no cavy, I feel that I should go into this star matter a little more deeply.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Is veil-trouble bothering you? We're having an awful spell of it here this spring, owing to the prevalence of gauzy blinkers on the headgear. These low-hanging masses of net cause all sorts of pesky trouble wherever women gather in bunches, such as crowded elevators. They get caught in handbangs, eyeglasses and things, and we all have to get out of the lift together, and then unscramble daintily. I love veils—and, believe me, most men do, too—but they can be a nuisance when the girls get in a jam.

Our Columbia University, like every other salon de skull-cramming, is getting ready its spring varsity show—and this year there will be no girls in the chorus! Last year the boys inserted some pretty coeds in the troupe, but the lads of the campus razzed the experiment by tossing pennies, and even overripe fruit, on the stage—to the disgust and consternation of the faculty. Strictly all-male company for '38, and the feature will be the appearance of Mr. John Bateman, 185-pound footbal captain, as Miss Mae West. Maybe Jack'll get tomatoes, too!

Coiffure-conscious ladies here have been all a-twitter over the arrival of M. Rene, from that Paris, to work little magic at the Rubenstein salon. He doesn't speak a word of English, but his hands perform on the hair in all languages. The girls have especially noted a new tint he gives the hair—a champagne rose hue somewhere between apricot and copper. Thanks, Rene, old Parisian—I'll have my champagne in a glass, as usual . . . And not too much of that.

I hear that Barbara Bennett, sister of Connie and Joan and the wife of tenor-singer Morton Downey, is going to become a little mother in June—for the fifth time. Barbara retired from a dance career to be strictly wife and mother—in a large and constructive way—while her blonde sisters continued in the spotlight's hot glare.

I spoke the other day of the way many of our shop windows are blowing whistles and ringing bells these days. Now most of them are filled with flowers, in keeping with the season. But we can't smell 'em—yet!

Pardon the style-show harping, but one Avenue emporium pulled a cutie the other day by showing styles for the whole family—using men as well as women models. It was an unusually interesting experiment in a static field!

YOUR FIGURE, MADAME!

Reports of Balinese Beauty Restore Favor to Natural Figure.

By Ida Jean Kain.

WHEN GLOBE trotters began to speak of the Balinese as the most beautiful women in the world, their sisters in Paris, Hollywood and New York decided in favor of the natural feminine figure. There seems to be no doubt that the maidens of this little Isle of Paradise have started something.

Flat chests have gone out of fashion, probably never to return, for the naturally curved figure is far lovelier than the string-bean silhouette. Women everywhere are interested in the measures that will improve the contour of the bust. The three factors on which the beauty of this measurement depends are weight, vitality and muscle tone.

For the Underweight.

The underweight girl with a low vitality is generally undeveloped in this area. Every effort should be made to improve the vitality and a general health program to add weight and increase muscle tone will effect a lovelier bust contour. The underweight needs a good nourishing diet, with plenty of milk, eggs, cereals, fruits and vegetables. She should have exercise in the fresh air, and, if possible, should spend at least two hours of the day out of doors. Then, too, it is important that she have adequate relaxation and longer hours of sleep.

The overweight woman must first of all bring her weight to normal. The tissues of the bust seem particulary susceptible to fatty deposit, and with overweight this measurement is apt to be abnormally large. Extreme care should be taken in reducing, however, and weight loss should not be too rapid or a sagging contour will result.

Balinese Habits.

The breasts are glands, but they are attached to and supported by muscles, and the tone of these pectoral muscles determine the position of the bust. Special exercises, therefore, are important in any figure program. The reason the maidens of Bali have such perfect figures is that exercise is as natural to them as breathing. They swim several times a day. Their native dances involve arm movements which exercise the pectorals, and their magnificent posture affords constant uplift of the bosom.

One of the best exercises for toning the pectoral muscles is the following:

POSITION: Standing or sitting,

with elbows chest level and hands interlocked in front of chest, palms together.

MOVEMENT: Resisting forcibly with the left hand and pushing with the right, slowly move the clasped hands over to the extreme left side. Keep the elbows shoulder level. Reverse the movement and repeat six times, relaxing between movements.

'Y. W.' Luncheon Guests Hear Miss Woodsmall

International Executive Secretary Urges Women to Give Democracy Devotion Equal to That Accorded Fascist States.

The Post Club Editor.

It is imperative that American women call forth the same degree of committment to the ideals of democracy and international co-operation as is given by women of the totalitarian states to the designs of their dictators, in the opinion fo Miss Ruth Woodsmall, executive secretary of the International Y. W. C. A. Miss Woodsmall, who is here from Geneva, international headquarters of the organization, yesterday addressed a luncheon sponsored by the local committee on interpreattion and support of the "Y. W.," of which Mrs. Edwin B. Parker is chairman. She is in the United States until May, having come to attend the biennial convention in Columbus, Ohio, April 26.

Women's organizations, she said are an effective force, but it is the great masses of the people who will determine whether or not our ideals will endure. "Women of this country must be willing to make a sacrifice of time and effort to take an intelligent interest in public affairs; to study, think and express themselves and to think things through instead of being carried away by propaganda," she said. "In other words, they must be intelligent participating citizens to perpetuate our democratic ideals."

Miss Woodsmall, who was introduced by Mrs. Parker, a member of the national board of the Y. W. C. A. as well as chairman of the interpretation committee, devoted most of her talk to a discussion of the service of the international "Y. W." It has been able to co-operate with the international labor office and other agencies she said, often supplying information from various parts of the world in which it has representatives.

She likened the international office in Geneva to a watch tower from which it was possible to look out upon the trends which were moving women throughout the world. She called attention also to the emergence of the women of the East from their centuries of seclusion, in contrast to the present overshadowing of the progress of women of Europe by the march of dictatorships.

Eastern Women Aid Their Nations

Had such a change not taken place in the status of women, Turkey could not have made its recent progress, she said. It would have been like a bird with one wing clipped, which held it to the ground. She pointed out also that the change had come without a sense of aggressiveness or sex conflict.

"As one looks at the world it is easy to be pessimistic," she said. "There is a question mark upon international efforts and it is hard to cling to the ideal based on the far-reaching thought of international solidarity. The crisis brings, however, not only danger but also opportunity—opportunity to demonstrate the reality of collective Christian activity.

"We are called upon to face in the direction we would go and to keep our eyes on the goal, that the world community—the vision of today—may become the reality of tomorrow."

Admiral Mark Bristol, for eight years United States high commissioner to Turkey, was present yesterday at the luncheon with Mrs. Bristol. They knew Miss Woodsmall when she was in Y. W. C. A. work in the Near East and consider her an outstanding authority on conditions there and in the Far East as well.

Honor Guest Has Progressive Luncheon

The luncheon yesterday was an informal occasion arranged in Barker Hall of the Y. W. C. A. and with no speakers' table. Miss Woodsmall, for the first course, sat at the table where Mrs. Albert Atwood, past president of the "Y. W.," was hostess, and later moved to that at which Mrs. Parker presided, then to that at which Admiral and Mrs. Bristol were entertaining a party of guests. Among them were Mrs. Donald Blaisdell, Mrs. Edmund Pendleton, Miss Nan Mitchell and Miss Alma Ruggles, all of whom had been in Turkey at the time the Bristols were there, either in the service of the Near East Relief or the "Y. W." Also at their table were Mrs. J. Fred Essary and Mrs. A. F. Eberley, jr., and Miss Edna Sandlin, of the national board, who was here with Miss Woodsmall.

Others with Mrs. Atwood were Mrs. Harlan Fiske Stone, wife of Justice Stone, chairman of the board of trustees; Judge Annabel Matthews, president of the Woman's Bar Association. With Parker were Gen. and Mrs. Daniel B. Devore, Mrs. John J. Myers and Mrs. William Lee Corbin, president of the local Y. W. C. A.

Miss Woodsmall's presence brought out a distinguished group of women interested in the "Y. W." and its significant place as an international women's organization. Among others present were Mrs. Henry Alva Strong, who made the gift of Strong Residence to the local branch; Mrs. L. Corrin Strong, Mrs. William E. Barker, the donor of Barker Hall in which the luncheon was held; Mrs. Donald Richberg, Mrs. Merle Thorpe, Mrs. John Jay O'Connor, president of the National Travelers' Aid Society, who was hostess to Mrs. Keith Merrill, president of the board of Potomac School, and her daughters, Eugenia and Rosemary, who are home from Miss Master's School at Dobb's Ferry for spring vacation; Mrs. William S. Culbertson, chairman of the World Fellowship Committee of the local "Y. W." which is having a luncheon Thursday; Mrs. Foster Adams, of the National Symphony Orchestra Guild; Mrs. Harold Moulton, Mrs. John Kendall, Mrs. Bancroft Davis, Mrs. Laura Puffer Morgan, who returned from Geneva only last December.

Also Mrs. Wilson Compton, Mrs. Genevieve Forbes Herrick, Mrs. Lawrence Houghteling, Mrs. Harold Hynds, Mrs. C. M. Palmer, jr., Mrs. Donald Roberts, Mrs. Henry Abbott, Mrs. Howard Piquet, Mrs. Frank A. Linzel, president of the Woman's Council of the Federation of Churches, Mrs. Ernest Griffith, Miss Hilda Yen.

Mrs. Roosevelt To Talk Before Business Clubs

Will Address Professional Women at Mayflower Hotel April 25.

Mrs. Roosevelt will address the Washington Business and Professional Women's Clubs at a dinner meeting the night of April 25 in the Mayflower Hotel it was announced last night by the president, Miss Nina Kinsella. Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, assistant administrator of the WPA, is chairman of the public relations committee of the club, under whose auspices the dinner will be held.

Miss Kinsella announced the meeting honoring the First Lady at the regular monthly dinner last night at the Powhatan Hotel, at which Dr. Justin K. Fuller was guest of honor and speaker.

Dr. Fuller, senior surgeon of the U. S. Public Health Service and medical director of the Bureau of Prisons, discussed application of mental hygiene as one solution for the crime problem.

"Increases in the incidence of mental disease and crime in this country," said Dr. Fuller, "have impressed every thinking person with the necessity for leveling off or reversing this trend. This is a legitimate field of public health, more especially that particular branch of public health known as mental hygiene.

"Attorney General Cummings has said that 'we can prevent crime' and has laid down principles of a program for this purpose. Assistant Surgeon General Walter L. Treadway has definitely located the place of mental hygiene in a Federal health program. It has also been aptly said that catching criminals is not enough to solve this modern problem of crime increase. Adequate treatment for the mentally ill therefore must be secured and we must regard the great majority of criminals as "mentally ill."

The most intelligent type of treatment for this type of patient is prevention, added Dr. Fuller. The underprivileged youth will almost certainly, sometime in his career, be "on the fence, he asserted, formative putty that will be molded into a grotesque shape by vicious gangsters if he falls on the wrong side, or into something straight and rather noble, if he can be guided properly into comparatively straight and narrow channels on the right side. Much has been done with this type of police boys clubs and similar organizations.

"This is a type of mental hygiene, of course, but most people are inclined to relegate mental hygiene to the treatment of less normal types who cannot be as easily influenced as the boy or girl so readily helped by the program illustrated above. Mental hygiene will be asked with increasing vehemence to find an answer to the more incorrigible type, 'the vicious pregangster,' who scoffs at the efforts of social workers, boys' clubs and policemen, however friendly they may be.

"These types constitute a graphic picture of what is meant by the constitutional psychopathic inferior: The intellectually bright, even at times brilliant, people who are unable to profit by past experience, who do the things today that they were punished for yesterday, forgetting that the doing entails a bitter penalty.

Misses Tillie Norwood, Clara Berenter and Eve Klein are others on the committee.

Chevy Chase Women Meet

Mrs. Roberta Lawson Is Lecturer Before Music Section of Club.

Mrs. Roberta Campbell Lawson, of Tulsa, Okla., president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs and an authority on Indian music, presented a lecture recital before the music section of the Chevy Chase Woman's Club yesterday afternoon. The meeting of the section, of which Mrs. Philip Gott is chairman, was held at the home of Mrs. R. W. Deaver, 2726 Brandywine street, with Mrs. Holland Huntington as cohostess.

Mrs. Lawson explained that tribal melodies were originated for ceremonials and that each was sacred to its own tribe, and recognized as its exclusive property. She told of some of the customs with which the songs were associated. One was the Navajo's "Corn Grinder Song," invoking the Great Spirit to give a good harvest.

The courtship song, sung by the young brave outside the tepee of the Indian maiden he is wooing, after they are wed becomes the lullaby song for their children.

Mrs. Lawson, because of a cold, was able to sing only one of the Indian songs, with which she illustrated her lecture, but she read the words and Miss Lorraine Sternberg, of General Federation headquarters, played the musical settings.

Another feature of the program was a group of Bach, Brahms and Scarlatti numbers, played by James Winship Lewis, concert pianist, of Baltimore. Mr. Lewis is director of the choir at the Church of the Messiah there.

Following the musicale, tea was served with Mrs. Robert J. Bryant and Mrs. Carl Oechsle pouring. The tea table was decorated with jonquils and Japanese iris and lighted with ivory tapers in crystal holders.

Last night the evening section of the Chevy Chase Club also met. Mrs. G. Edwin Rowland was hostess at her home, 3806 Kanawaha street, and the program was devoted to Chevy Chase history.

Mrs. George Winchester Stone talked on the founding of the Community Club, one of the oldest in the Chevy Chase neighborhood; Miss Ella Given, principal of E. V. Brown School from the time it opened until she retired two years ago, gave the school's history, and Thomas Robertson, a lifetime resident, told anecdotes of Chevy Chase. There was also a paper, prepared by Mrs. Eugene Stevens on its history, which was read by Mrs. Rowland. Mrs. Alfred Savage was in charge of the program.

They expect 200 members and guests.

SPRING may turn young men to writing love sonnets but it turns club members to the prosaic consideration of elections. Even the Arts Club is no exception.

Last night Mrs. Charles Bittinger, chairman of the nominating committee, and those serving with her, met at the club to select candidates to be voted on at the annual meeting April 28. Lewis Lofton Moneyway is concluding his second year as president of the organization. The slate of candidates—two or more for each office—will be posted on the club bulletin board 10 days before the election.

With Mrs. Bittinger on the committee are Dr. George Girty, Mrs. Caroline McKinley Ashbrook, A. Lenox Uhler, George Edward Muth, Marie K. Saunders and Morley J. Williams.

Mr. and Mrs. Duncan Phillips were hosts at opening of the current art exhibition at the club Sunday afternoon—a showing of paintings by Gifford and Reynolds Beal, both noted New York artists, who are Mrs. Phillips' cousins. Other exhibitions will be one on April 17, of cloissenne and satins in Oriental and bird designs, and Thibetan paintings, owned by Albert Osgood, and the annual exhibition of the National League of American Pen Women April 24 to May 1, concurrent with the league's biennial convention.

Federation Asks Transit Firm To Ban Signs for Beer and Ale

Ads as 'Healthful Drinks' in Cars and Buses Are Called Misleading to Children in Resolution Offered by W. C. T. U.

Advertisements in street cars and buses proclaiming "beer and ale nature's healthful drinks" were protested in a resolution passed yesterday by the D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs. The resolution, which was presented last month by the Women's Christian Temperance Union, was brought up for action yesterday by Mrs. Sidney Jacobs, vice chairman of the resolutions commitee. It provides that the District of Columbia Transit Co. shall be requested to remove signs carrying "these misstatements."

It was declared, in discussion of the resolution, that the advertisements reach 4,000 persons daily in the 350 buses and cars in which they appear, many of them young people. Supporters of the request for removal of the signs said they were designed to influence youth to consider beer-drinking "harmless."

The resolution was indorsed by Mrs. Otto Hammerlund, chairman of welfare for the Federation, and was passed at the morning session. An effort to send it back to individual clubs for action was defeated. Mrs Lloyd W. Biddle presided at the meeting.

Vocational Training Subject of Talk

The morning session included an off-the-record talk on "Marihuana," by a representative of the Federal Bureau of Investigation and a talk on vocational education by Mr. C. H. Dennis, executive secretary of the American Vocational Association. Mr. Dennis was introduced by Mrs. Raleigh Gilchrist, chairman of the education committee of the federation.

"Vocational education" has had to start in the cellar and we have slowly and reluctantly arrived at the position where we're willing to face the facts that a great majority of our youth will not go through college," said Mr. Dennis. "The early concept of vocational training was that it was designed for the problem boy or girl who was a misfit in high school, he said, adding that now there is a distinct trend away from this attitude to a recognition that it is requisite to meet the economic problem of young people who do not have college training.

"High schools have been designed for the 25 per cent who go to college, leaving the 75 per cent who do not without training suited to their needs," he said. "This has resulted in disturbing our educational situation. With the development of a new attitude toward vocational training, the age level is gradually moving up and many high school graduates now are enrolled in trade schools.

Washington Schools Recognizing Need

In Washington he said, there are evident signs that authorities are realizing the need for expansion in the program for vocational training. Until now, he added, the District has been behind other cities in this branch of education. Teachers here are now on the junior high school level but should be on the senior high school level, as they are in New York, he said.

Mr. Dennis, before taking his present post, had been deputy State superintendent of public instruction in Pennsylvania, in charge of vocational education, and from there went to Michigan where he was assistant State superintendent, in charge of high schools as well as vocational schools. He commended the work of the Federation and similar women's organizations in investigating school and welfare problems and bringing their influence to bear in seeking a remedy.

Quaint Dresses Revived At Gay Nineties Party

Derbied Dandies With Their Handle-Bar Mustaches Dance With Pompadoured Ladies Wearing Frills, Feathers and Flocks of Petticoats.

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

Derbied dandies, sporting handle-bar mustaches, tripped the light fantastic toe with pompadoured ladies, who swirled about in frills, feathers and pounds of petticoats—all by way of reviving the gaslit-era in the grand ballroom of the Willard Hotel last night.

HOPE R. MILLER.

The occasion was the Gay Nineties Ball, sponsored by the President's Cup Regatta Association. All the pomp and ceremony of the day of swollen sleeves, hourglass silhouettes and plumed bonnets marked the event. All the quaintly colorful symbols of the decade of checked trousers, high-buttoned yellow shoes and polished canes blended into the scene that included a "barbershop quartet," a "North of Boston" dance and a flock of Gibson Girls thrown in for good measure.

Such antiquated songs as "A Bicycle Built for Two" and "Only a Bird in a Gilded Cage" floated up and down the ballroom, as strolling entertainers in characteristic garb threaded through the company and found their way to the small ballroom. The latter was transformed into an old-fashioned tavern where checkered tablecloths, dim lights and a brass-railed bar had been brought right out of the feather-duster decade to add another ninety-ish note to the layout. Men who looked as if they might hitch old Dobbin to the shay as a matter of course each morning congregated there, and bowed to ladies who coquetted coyly yet made it plain that lips that touched liquor could never touch theirs.

Harold Allen Long Heads Receiving Line

The receiving line primly taking its place at 10 o'clock, was headed by Harold Allen Long, who was quite a dandy. His slate-colored coat contrasted nicely with his snuff-colored trousers, and his button-toned shoes, stock tie and brown derby were exactly the type of accessories all fashionable fops wore back in the naughty nineties.

Also lined up in full fashion to greet the guests were Mr. and Mrs. George Wenzel, Mr. and Mrs. George David Sullivan, Mrs. Kathryn Cunningham Ward and William McManus—all of whom were turned out in snappy costumes reminiscent of the gayest era folded into the past. A special center of interest was Mrs. Wenzel's outfit, a fur-beloved black and white silk frock trimmed with lace to match that on her pansy-circled turban.

Dancing got under way as John Slaughter's Gay Ninetieers struck up a waltz. After six numbers, the program began when between 25 and 30 "Gay Nineties Dandies" marched into the ballroom, wearing checkerboard suits and derbies, carrying polished canes and singing "The Man That Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo."

With Robert H. Davidson, directing, and Harold S. Fitz doing a first-class job of managing, the "dandies" sang several numbers, winding up to a grand climax with "I've Been Working on the Railroad."

A pleasant interlude with "The Whistling Thrush" (Janet Coon) was the next part of the program, and then 10 young ladies, under the direction of Marian Chance, whirled onto the floor—a bevy of beauties in white tarleton skirts and fitted bodices to do the Viennese waltz. Later in the program, the same dancers changed into seersucker dresses, Gibson-girl style, presented the "North of Boston" dance.

Meanwhile, Jeanette Bittner, "The Jenny Lind Girl," entertained the crowd with several solos, and then gave over the spotlight to a dance team that whirled through a routine, while the orchestra played "The Sidewalks of New York."

'Dandies' Quartet Brings Down the House

As hundreds of costumed guests paraded up and down the hall for the grand march, the next number on the program, a trio of judges put their heads together to decide whose costume was the best. More judging was in order as guests competed in the stately schottische and lively polka.

Before the party broke up there was more singing in the ballroom and "the tavern." The "Dandies' Quartette" took the spotlight to sing a few numbers and brought down the house. In the group were James R. Adamson, M. B. Reynolds, Raymond B. Leavitt and George A. Small.

A cross-section of Washington society was represented in the throng of almost 1,000 guests. For one time, there were more gents than ladies at a Washington party, and as the orchestra started playing the final number, each one seemed busy with plans for "seeing Nellie home."

Among box-holders for the event—and it looked as if every box was filled—were Mr. and Mrs. Eric Greenleaf, Mr. and Mrs. Leroy Sheriff, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Burchell, David E. McCoy, Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur H. Collier, Mr. and Mrs. I. C. Blickenstaff, Robert W. Michie, Mrs. Samuel Shanks, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Lust, Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Anderson, Mrs. Isabelle Reifenbrg and Miss Carol Kraus.

Also among the guests were representatives of several State societies, including Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Morris, of South Carolina; Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Calhoun, of Kentucky; Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Randall, of Arizona; Mr. and Mrs. Sheldon Fairchild, of Delaware; Miss Gertrude Lewis, of Iowa; Mr. and Mrs. Ira Bain, of Alabama; Mr. and Mrs. I. C. Buchanan, of Virginia; Mr. and Mrs. Byron S. Huie, jr., of Wyoming; Mr. and Mrs. Paul Kelley, of Nebraska; Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Beckman, of Texas.

Box parties were much in evidence at the ball. Mr. and Mrs. Frank S. Whitman entertained Mrs. Ben Cravens, Mrs. William Eads, Mr. and Mrs. M. X. Sullivan, Miss Jacqueline Hoover, of Norfolk, Va.; Gibb Smith, Gordon Buchanan and Marley Christy. Another party was made up of Mr. and Mrs. Edward S. Brashears, Mr. and Mrs. J. Stanley Long, Mr. and Mrs. Spencer B. Cirry and Mrs. Belle Long. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Ellis Lodge were in still another party, which included Mr. and Mrs. James W. Burch, Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Gardiner and F. Joseph Donahue.

About The Town

With Dudley Harmon

THE FIRST SOCIAL GUN in a battery of parties lined up for officers of the British ship York went off yesterday afternoon when the Commandant of the Navy Yard and Mrs. George T. Pettingill entertained at a reception in their honor. The boys in blue and gold and their commander, Vice Admiral S. J. Meyrick, had been welcomed to Washington earlier in the day by a salute off Hains Point and another salvo off the Navy Yard. From now on their visit will be a maze of official calls, bows, balls, dinners, luncheons and teas.

There are about 30 of them, all seemingly at least 6 feet tall. In the receiving line with Admiral and Mrs. Pettingill were Vice Admiral and Mrs. S. J. Meyrick and Capt. Robert Morse, of the York, which is flagship of the West Indian squadron. Most of the officers are fairly familiar with America by this time, as the ship cruised up and down the coast last summer.

Gamble

he would ask the Senate to accept them this week if the District Commissioners approve.

Renewal of hearings on a bill to legalize horse racing in Washington before the judiciary sub-committee of the House District Committee brought testimony that the District would get $600,000 a year in revenue.

Walter O'Hara, former Narragansett operator, whose option last year on the Benning track was largely responsible for defeat of the bill, is no longer interested in the venture it was said.

Malcolm S. McConihe, Democratic national committeeman for the District, told the sub-committee that Mrs. John Hay Whitney and Mrs. Dodge Sloane, prominent sportswomen, are interested in backing a Washington track.

Members of Congress before voting for the District numbers bill questioned committee members as to whether a member could be arrested for possession of an Irish sweepstake ticket.

"Yes," responded Palmisano, "or for possession of a list of telephone numbers either."

While the House debated the measure two alleged runners for Capitol employes who play the game were sitting in the gallery opposite the Speaker's rostrum watching the proceedings.

Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, who led the committee proponents of the bill, admitted that the legislation as drawn would apply to members of Congress with sweepstakes tickets, private poker games, or any other form of gambling.

Laughing, however, he explained that no one expected the police to make any such arrests.

"You can't write a law that does not apply to all forms of gambling alike," he said. "But custom has set up certain social distinctions which officers of the law observe."

Representative Dickstein (Democrat), of New York, complained that the penalties for possession of numbers slips are too severe.

"In my city or down South," he said, "such an offense would not carry a penalty of more than a small fine."

The District proposed law permits a fine of $500, imprisonment of six months, or both.

Representative Powers (Democrat), of New Jersey, during the heat of the debate between District Committee members, interjected the question:

"Why do we bother with this little form of gambling when newspapers give so much free advertising to the Irish sweepstakes?"

Another member observed that the police could spend their time better ferreting out perpetrators of crimes of assault or robbery.

Palmisano took half an hour to explain the basis of his opposition to the bill, which he said was centered against giving police the right to obtain search warrants on information and belief.

Dirksen argued that most of the States now have laws which allow issuance of similar warrants.

While the opposition to the District racetrack bill will not be heard until today, it appeared from yesterday's hearing that much of the objection to setting up a track here has been dissipated by the withdrawal of Walter O'Hara from the picture.

McConihe said that a number of District officials, some of whom were lukewarm or hostile to previous bills, are now in favor of the proposal. He named Commissioners Melvin C. Hazen and George E. Allen, Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, and U. S. Attorney David A. Pine.

McConihe said he and W. C. Murphy, an attorney, who spoke for the Central Labor Union, now holds an option on the Benning track and that no one person would be allowed to hold a monopoly of the stock. He said that he had rejected an offer of an investment of $100,000 in the venture.

Murphy said that the Central Labor Union is behind the bill and believes that it will aid employment.

Among others who spoke for the legislature were: John Paul Jones, of Federation of Business Men's Association; Dr. Arthur Hooe, a physician; Mrs. Margaret Hopkins Worrell, Columbia Heights Citizens Association; Frank E. James, Benning Citizens Association, and Miss Etta Taggart, president of the Washingtonians.

HAPPY RELIEF FROM PAINFUL BACKACHE

Caused by Tired Kidneys

Many of those gnawing, nagging, painful backaches people blame on colds or strains are often caused by tired kidneys—and may be relieved when treated in the right way.

The kidneys are Nature's chief way of taking excess acids and poisonous waste out of the blood. Most people pass about 3 pints a day or about 3 pounds of waste.

If the 15 miles of kidney tubes and filters don't work well, poisonous waste matter stays in the blood. These poisons may start nagging backaches; rheumatic pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills, used successfully by millions for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help the 15 miles of kidney tubes flush out poisonous waste from the blood. Get Doan's Pills. dv

Daniel Klapp, Early Camera Artist, Is Dead

Daniel Newman Klapp, one of Washington's notable amateur photographers and a retired employe of the Government Printing Office, died yesterday at his home at 1400 Fairmont street northwest. He had been in failing health since suffering a heart stroke in October, 1935, and would have been 73 years old next August 3.

Mr. Klapp came to Washington in 1892. Photography was one of his hobbies and he made many pictures of Washington scenes at the turn of the century, including "progress" photographs of the building of the Washington Monument. His picture of "Gold Dust" and "Dunk," the Zoo's first elephants, recently was presented to Dr. William M. Mann, the Zoo's director.

Until he suffered his first stroke, Mr. Klapp sang base in the choir of St. Paul's Lutheran Church, Connecticut avenue and Ellicott street northwest, for which his handicraft, another of his hobbies, had fashioned the wood altar carvings and candelabra.

Mrs. Klapp, who survives him, is the former Amy Eckhardt, daughter of the late Nicholas Eckhardt, well-known Washington builder, whose work included the Concordia Lutheran and Eastern Presbyterian churches.

Mr. Klapp was born in St. Paris, Ohio, the son of the late Jeremiah and Eliza Klapp. He leaves, in addition to Mrs. Klapp, five brothers, Alban, of Washington; Martin, of Kenton, Ohio; William, of Springfield, Ohio; Brosius, of Circleville, Ohio, and Orrin Klapp, of Chicago.

Funeral services will be held at 2 p. m. tomorrow from the S. H. Hines funeral home, 2901 Fourteenth street northwest. Burial will be in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

Over the Coffee

By Harlan Miller

After seeing herself and the President satirized at the theater one evening, Mrs. Roosevelt encountered one of her sons in the lobby . . . She pretended not to see him.

"I know," she told a friend, "that he'd be better off not to be associated with me at the moment."

American aviators who have been arrested for flying over forbidden areas in Japan must be agog at the news that the Japanese navy's offices in New York City overlook the Brooklyn Navy Yard. Nice view of the East River, too.

Senator Lodge's secretaries have been trying to keep from him the newspaper stories about a noisy evening in his office suite, quieted by Capitol police.

They don't object to his knowing about the innocent shindig . . . What they want to spare him is the news that the guards hesitated to intervene because they thought the sedate young Senator might be in on the frolic.

Golden gates bar the way to the corridors where the Supreme Court justices' private offices are situated . . . If you have an appointment—and the justices by no means immure themselves from the world—a young man at the marshal's office verifies that fact by phone and then leads you past the sentries and through the gates.

Few millionaires could afford a finer conservatory than the great glass-domed hothouse of the U. S. Botanic Gardens across the street from the Capitol.

Occasionally you can see pairs of young lovers from the Government offices sitting on the marble benches among the tropical foliage, banana and papaya palms, heedless of the wide-eyed tourists from Ohio and Missouri . . . Once in a while a lawmaker or two drop in for meditation or a chat.

Even a dictator couldn't grow better azaleas.

WHITE HOUSE DIDOES: Like the hero of Charles Lamb's "Dissertion on Roast Pig," President Roosevelt has a zestful flair for burning down a shanty occasionally for the sake of one savory ham sandwich.

To illustrate: He received letters about the TVA rumpus from people who said they had read articles that he was opposed to a Congressional inquiry. He said he presumed that these letter writers had actually read such articles.

Probably, he surmised, these articles were written by special writers and columnists. He wanted it made plain that the story was made of whole cloth.

Apparently no one around the White House had time to run through a week's papers to verify the facts and single out the malodorous wretch and absolve the innocent.

"—200 yards and millions apart."

A Dixie Senator was painting such a melchancholy picture of the need for economy, and trying patrioticallly to squeeze a 10 per cent discount off the cost of government . . . His lament was so harrowing that I sprinted over to the House for solace—just in time to see a pension bill passed that will cost the country plenty of millions—and the House passed it in a magnificant burst of patriotism. A watchdog of the Treasury at one end, while it was being shoveled out at the other.

Mercifully, one body often doesn't know what the other body, 200 yards away, is doing.

Greenbelt Wants A Flag and a Seal

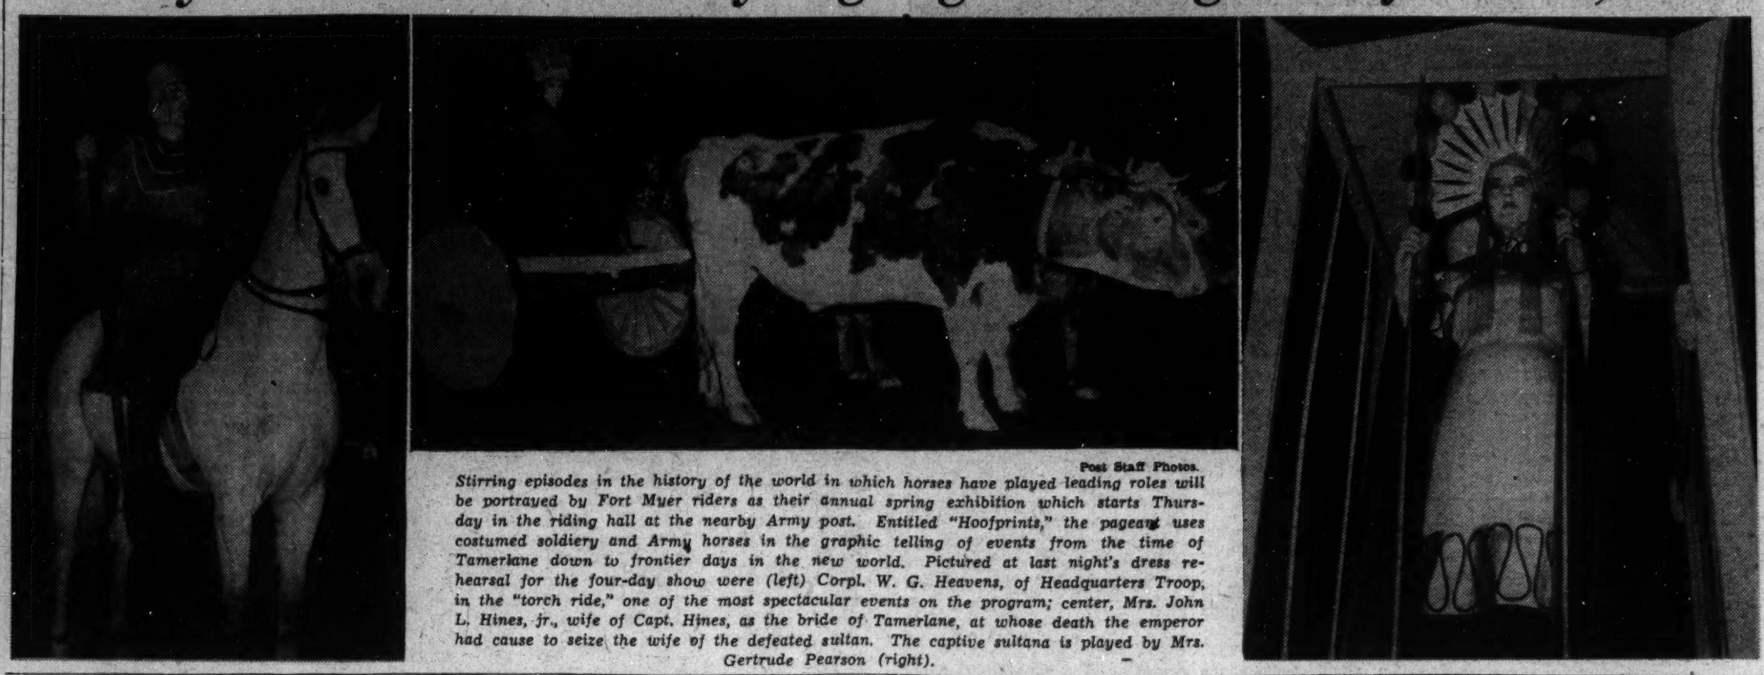
Greenbelt, Md., a Government-supervised community of 443 families, decided last night it needed not only an official seal to affix to official documents, but an official flag as well.

The Greenbelt council at its regular meeting appropriated $50 to be given as cash prizes to designers of flag and seal judged the most suitable by a contest committee headed by Sherrod East. The committee was authorized to award $20 to the designer of the best flag and $20 to the designer of the most appropriate seal, with the balance to be divided between creators of the second-best entries.

The contest is to close May 14.

Manager Roy C. Braden told the council meeting that Greenbelt families desiring them will be assigned 50 by 50 foot vegetable and flower garden plots. He said 236 families had requested them.

Fort Myer Riders Tell History Highlights in Pageant of Horses, Oxen



Post Staff Photos.

Stirring episodes in the history of the world in which horses have played leading roles will be portrayed by Fort Myer riders as their annual spring exhibition which starts Thursday in the riding hall at the nearby Army post. Entitled "Hoofprints," the pageant uses costumed soldiery and Army horses in the graphic telling of events from the time of Tamerlane down to frontier days in the new world. Pictured at last night's dress rehearsal for the four-day show were (left) Corpl. W. G. Heavens, of Headquarters Troop, in the "torch ride," one of the most spectacular events on the program; center, Mrs. John L. Hines, jr., wife of Capt. Hines, as the bride of Tamerlane, at whose death the emperor had cause to seize the wife of the defeated sultan. The captive sultana is played by Mrs. Gertrude Pearson (right).

Citizens Favor Unit Rule Over Playgrounds

Georgetown Unit Appoints Committee to Study Zoning Problem.

The Georgetown Citizens Association last night approved plans to place playgrounds under direction of a single agency, in a meeting at St. John's Parish Hall. The group deferred action on naming the agency which should administer the playgrounds.

They named a committee of five persons, headed by William B. Poland, to study zoning problems and report on their findings at the association's next meeting.

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, reviewed the activities of the Police Boys Club and urged support for the present fund-raising campaign. His appeal was backed up by the association's president, Ernest I. Lewis.

The association urged removal of abandoned street car tracks in Georgetown.

North Capitol Citizens

The North Capitol Citizens Association, meeting at McKinley High School, adopted a resolution demanding uniform enforcement of traffic regulations after Frank N. Jarvis, chairman of the safety committee, said an investigation showed "considerable laxity" in enforcement. Miss Ada C. Payne, delegate to the Citywide Playground Council, reported that attendance at meetings of the council led her to believe playground co-ordination in some form probably would be accomplished.

The association will sponsor a play, "Mrs. Bumstead-Leigh," the night of April 5 at the Langley auditorium. It is to be given by the Eckington Players, under direction of Miss Pauline E. Oaks.

Society of Natives

Robert V. Fleming, president of Riggs National Bank, was voted the certificate of award by the Society of Natives, meeting last night at the Washington Club, for "outstanding services to the District of Columbia in 1937." The certificate will be presented at the society's annual banquet April 25 at the Mayflower Hotel.

Among Fleming's honors listed on the certificate are those of treasurer and life trustee of the Corcoran Art Gallery, life trustee of the National Geographic Society, treasurer of the United States Chamber of Commerce, trustee of the National Training School for Boys, director of the Boys Clubs of America, member of the Council for the Boy Scouts of America, member of the Sons of the American Revolution.

Midcity Citizens

Exemption of members of Congress from the proposed District income tax was opposed by the Midcity Citizens Association meeting last night at the Thompson School, as "an unjust discrimination against citizens of the District." The association approved advancing the date of licensing automobiles from January 1 to April 1.

A resolution was adopted urging that the manufacture, sale and use of marihuana in any form be prohibited by law.

Trinidad Citizens

Approval of legalized horse racing in the District was voted last night by the Deanwood Civic Association, meeting at the Deanwood Public School. The association organized a garden club and voted recognition to a boys' club of 25 members organized in the neighborhood sometime ago.

A card tournament at Deanwood School was planned for April 16, sponsored by the association.

Deanwood Civic Ass'n

Suggestion that the new bridge over the Anacostia River be named after John Philip Sousa, famous march composer, was voted last night by the Trinidad Citizens Association.

The group asked for installation of new fire boxes in the Trinidad section and recommended changing the date for automobile registration in the District from January 1 to April 1.

Fraternities Rule G.W. Campus, Says Candidate Ennes

Charging that 10 per cent of the pupils control student activities, more than 200 George Washington undergraduates last night demanded "good government and equal opportunity for all" in a mass meeting at Corcoran Hall.

Referring to the fraternal groups of the school as a "political control of student government by too-often selfish groups," Howard Ennes, independent candidate for the presidential nomination, declared "student activities should draw their membership and support from all groups—independent, social, faculty and university administration."

The meeting, called to nominate members of the "Independent Voters League" for the election of officers on April 28, named the following students as officers: Howard Ennes, president; Wayne Kniffen, program director; Charles Gastrock, student committee; George Derr, forum director; Carol Fox, secretary-treasurer, and William Gausmann, advocate.

4 Robberies Break 3 Weeks' Lull in Washington Crime

A three weeks lull in which only ten robberies were reported was broken yesterday by three holdups and a $2,906-safe blowing.

Charles Long, manager of the Standard Drug Co., 1113 G street northwest, found Saturday's receipts gone when he opened yesterday morning.

Harry E. Erhardt, 28, of 228 E street northeast, a cab driver, captured an armed bandit early yesterday after grappling with the man for several minutes at Fourteenth and K streets northwest. He had been driving while the man held the weapon at his head for nearly an hour. The suspect gave his name as Harry N. Inglehart, 23, 400 block Third street northeast.

Two other cab drivers were robbed of a total of $14 when they were forced to drive to the 1800 block Bladensburg road northeast, Sunday night.

Cleric Confesses Doubt Church Can Cure World's Ills

"For the first time in my ministry of 35 years, I must confess that the Christian Church hasn't got a message strong enough to cure the ills of the world in which we are now living," said Dr. Martin Luther Enders, pastor of the First Lutheran Church of Baltimore, addressing the congregation at Union Lutheran Lenten services last night at the Church of the Reformation.

Stating that "the repudiation of the teachings of the Christian Church has been responsible for the heartaches, ills and distress abroad," he told the audience that he had "no idea how the current would run" and whether the next generation would be able to bring a restoration of the virtues of honor and the high ideals of faith America had prior to 1914.

Members of the Lutheran Brotherhoods of the city were special guests at the service. Participating ministers were Dr. Oscar Blackwelder and the Rev. Ralph Loew, of the Reformation Church, and the Rev. Edward Goetz, pastor of Zion Lutheran congregation.

Aid Liberalized For Released D. C. Prisoners

Welfare Board Acts on Complaint Many Become Public Charges.

The Board of Public Welfare yesterday instructed D. C. Penal Institutions Superintendent Ray L. Huff to "liberalize" the allotment of funds to released prisoners.

Up until the appointment of Huff last year, each prisoner after completing his sentence was given $10. Immediately upon taking office he introduced the system whereby prisoners were given money depending upon "their needs."

Modern criminologists have found that many inmates in the institutions have enough money "on the outside" to protect their interests upon release.

Recently, however, the Washington Criminal Justice Association and several welfare organizations protested to the penal committee of the Board of Public Welfare that many released prisoners were becoming charges on the relief rolls.

In one instance, it was pointed out, a prisoner was released with "meager funds" and unable to find employment, was given a gun by a friend, in order to support himself by robbery.

The board pointed out that it will not interfere with the setup inaugurated by Huff, but wants a more "liberal" interpretation on the "needs" of the released prisoner.

Train Victim Loses Both Legs and One Arm in Alexandria

A man tentatively identified as Earle K. Osburn, 38, of the 400 block of Massachusetts avenue northwest, suffered amputation of both legs and an arm last night when he attempted to board a moving train near Alexandria Union Station.

Although conscious when taken to the Alexandria Hospital, he was unable to give police a coherent account of the accident. Papers in his pockets indicated he was discharged from Troop M, Third Cavalry, of the Army in 1920.

According to police, the man apparently tried to board the moving train somewhere between the station and Braddock road, in Alexandria, and fell under the wheels of the locomotive. Engineer E. Shepperdson said he did not see him until after the accident occurred.

Girl, 12, Ran in Street; Driver Freed in Death

William R. Muench, 38, 1513 Oates street northeast, was exonerated by the coroner's jury yesterday after it was testified that 12-year-old Virginia Assaid ran into the street in front of her home, 655 B street northeast, March 21. Muench's car hit her and she died in Casualty Hospital four days later.

Farmers Told to Build Own Economic Machine

Referring to the new farm act as "a long-time program," Reuben Brigham, of the Department of Agriculture, yesterday called upon farmers at the University of Maryland to help build their own "economic machine."

Brigham spoke to more than 200 farm leaders from 11 Maryland counties.

Crash Stops Stolen Car Driver Before Owner Reports Theft

Alleged theft of a car last night landed Timothy Keeley, 28, of South Boston, Mass., in the hands of Montgomery County police before the car was reported stolen.

Owner of the car, Maj. R. B. Smith, of Fort Meade, Md., reported to Prince Georges County Police at 9 p. m. that his car had been stolen in Laurel some time between 7 p. m. and the time of his report.

Meanwhile at 8:45 p. m., Maj. Smith's car, driven by Keeley, collided near Ashton, Md., with an automobile owned and operated by E. C. Stewart, 108 Exeter road, Bethesda, Md. Police said Keeley was driving on the wrong side of the road when the collision occurred.

Sergt. D. L. Snyder and Officer Windsor C. Poole of the Montgomery County Police, took Keeley to the Montgomery General Hospital at Sandy Spring for treatment of a lacerated nose and bruised knee. On the way to the hospital they heard over their radio the look out for Maj. Smith's car.

They arrested Keeley on the spot, and after his injuries were treated, locked him up at the Silver Spring substation, to be turned over to the chief of police at Laurel.

Stewart was not injured in the accident.

Officials, Bankers Alike Praise O'Connor, Retiring Comptroller

Bust of Roosevelt and Watch Are Given Currency Head as Quips Fly About His Gubernatorial Ambitions at Testimonial Dinner.

Retiring tomorrow as Comptroller of the Currency, J. F. T. O'Connor last night heard Cabinet members, Congressmen, bankers and receivers pay high tribute to his service to the Nation during the past five years.

"The brightest page in the history of this Administration is its restoration of the country's banking system," declared Representative Henry B. Steagall (Democrat), of Alabama, attributing to O'Connor a large measure of credit for the achievement.

An audience of 1,000 at the testimonial dinner in the ballroom of the Mayflower heard a score of speakers express admiration for O'Connor's administration of the Comptroller's office and warm personal affection for "Jefty."

Robert V. Fleming, past president of the American Bankers Association, said O'Connor "has added luster to a great office. He has given splendid service to the American banking system and the American people."

A Jo Davidson bust of President Roosevelt was presented to the guest of honor on behalf of employes of the Comptroller's Office by George P. Barse, while Phillips L. Goldsborough, former Senator from Maryland, gave O'Connor a gold watch from the staff of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Responding, O'Connor pointed out that in spite of the present "severe recession" no bank has closed as a result of the drop in stock market values.

References, both coy and direct, to the retiring Comptroller's candidacy for the Democratic nomination as Governor of California found all speakers wishing O'Connor "Godspeed in whatever he undertakes."

With Representative John Dockweiler (Democrat), of California, another candidate in the California race, in the audience, Senator William Gibbs McAdoo said, "I'm the neutralest man you ever saw."

"What I said about primaries a while back still goes," remarked Postmaster General James A. Farley, seated next to James Roosevelt at the head table.

Other speakers included Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, Secretary of Commerce Roper, Jesse Jones, RFC chairman; Ronald Ransom, vice chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and Senators Sherman Minton (Democrat), of Indiana, and Josiah W. Bailey (Democrat), of North Carolina.

Gen. Craig Links Peace and U. S. Preparedness

Officers Studying Draft Told Mobilization Is All Set.

Gen. Malin Craig, Army Chief of Staff, said yesterday that hope for peace rests in the ability of the United States to mobilize its military resources rapidly.

He told 50 active and reserve Army, Navy and Marine officers studying plans for wartime recruiting that had the country been as well prepared in 1917 as it is today the World War would have been ended months sooner.

Gen. Craig added that "in planning we are far ahead of any period in our history. We have learned many lessons from the World War, not the least that distance does not mean immunity."

The officers began a 12-day study of Army and Navy machinery to mobilize manpower through volunteers and then by selective draft machinery like that of the World War.

Detailed plans to mobilize manpower quickly in event of another conflict have been worked out.

In contrast with secrecy which generally surrounds military plans, American "M-Day" (Mobilization Day) industrial and personnel objectives long have been public property. The latter are:

1. The Army and National Guard, numbering 375,000 to 400,000 men, and the Navy a third as many, would be ready for action at start of war.

2. In 30 days 300,000 volunteers and, in 60 days, 500,000 would be sought to expand the regular fighting units and for replacements.

3. In 45 to 60 days, operations would be started by a countrywide universal draft organization of 150,000 men and women. By end of the fourth month, the Army would try to have 1,250,000 recruits, the Navy, 500,000.

Col. Sanderford Jarman of the War Department general staff said: "This committee has prepared a draft of a selective service law to submit to Congress if the emergency shall arise. It has prepared regulations to carry the proposed law into effect.

"It has the necessary forms for printing ready. It has reduced the problem of printing 500,000,000 copies of forms from weeks to days."

Knutson Warns of War.

By the Associated Press.

Representative Knutson (Republican), of Minnesota, one of the Congressmen who voted against America's entrance into the World War, said in a radio speech last night that "our late allies" would like to "drag us into the welter of another world war to save them."

Rainey Urges Jobs Be Made For U. S. Youth

5,000,000 Unemployed Is Held 'Major Social Problem' Facing America.

Dr. Homer P. Rainey, director of the American Youth Commission, last night urged that some method be found of creating jobs for young persons not attending school.

In a speech before members of the Boys' Guidance Association at the Willard Hotel, Dr. Rainey declared the nearly 5,000,000 unemployed youths between 16 and 25 years old constitute "one of the major social problems" facing us today. Such material, he said, was used by both Hitler and Mussolini to lift themselves to power.

Specific problems confronting youth today, Rainey asserted, are difficulty of getting jobs and fear of losing jobs when obtained. In addition, he said, low-wage scales made marriage impossible for many, as shown by falling birth rates.

As a remedy for the situation, Dr. Rainey proposed that schools and public employment agencies institute a program of vocational training for students about to leave school and perhaps attempt to find them jobs.

Then, pointing out that there are not enough jobs to go around, he suggested a method be found which would allow more youths to enter services now undermanned. He mentioned the health services, forestry and recreational programs as illustrations of activities needing increased personnel.

He declared, in that connection, that "we cannot continue to allow the American Medical Association to limit the number of people going into medical service nor can we allow such organizations as the American Federation of Labor to limit apprenticeships." He explained that it is unwise to allow any organized group to control a profession or industry which exists for the common good.

Dr. Rainey was introduced by William J. Neale, president of the Boys' Guidance Association.

Post Is Credited With Share in Saving 16 Lives

Traffic Deaths Cut 45 Pct. in First Three Months of This Year.

Sixteen Washingtonians have been spared violent deaths this year and Safety Director William A. Van Duzer yesterday gave the city's newspapers credit for a large part of this record.

In the Nation, newspapers were credited by the National Safety Council with a leading role in efforts which saved 1,800 lives in traffic since last November, according to the Associated Press.

Since January 1, in Washington, Van Duzen said, deaths on highways have dropped approximately 45 per cent compared with the same period last year. Personal injuries are down 14 per cent, property damage is 14½ per cent less. This year's roll of traffic dead is 19; that for the same period last year was 35.

"If we can only keep these figures on the down-trend," the traffic director said, "Washington is headed for an all-time safety record. Our aim is to save lives and to that end the motoring public is slowly but surely awakening to its responsibility."

He praised The Washington Post for its "ceaseless efforts" to instill safety in the minds of its readers and credited a large share of the general improvement to its continuing traffic campaign. "The newspapers," he added, "are playing an important part in our battle."

Nationally, 2,180 traffic deaths were reported in February, 420 or 16 per cent fewer than in February, 1937. The number declined 10 per cent in November and December from the corresponding months in 1936 and 16 per cent in January from the total in January, 1937.

Maryland reported a 40 per cent reduction in traffic deaths in the first two months of this year, placing it second to Vermont's 44 per cent on the honor roll of "safety States."

Rail-Auto Crashes Kill 1,875 in Year

Auto accidents at highway-railroad grade crossings claimed 1,875 lives in 1937—the greatest number since 1930, when 2,020 deaths were reported.

The figures, made public Sunday by the Association of American Railroads, revealed that a total of 4,484 grade-crossing accidents occurred during the year, in which 5,138 persons were injured. Fatalities, however, showed a decrease of 693, compared with the peak year of 1928, when 2,568 persons lost their lives.

Despite the increase in deaths, the report gave credit to recent safety campaigns, pointing to the steady increase in number of autos. In 1928, the report said, there was one accident for each 9,538 cars, while in 1937 one fatality for each 15,750 autos occurred.

Peace 'Aids' Ask Boycott To Halt Wars

Rep. Scott Warns of Fascist 'Menace' to America.

800 Shuot for Change in Neutrality Law, Arms to Spain.

With representatives of 23 liberal and trade union groups voicing approval, an audience of more than 800 persons in Masonic Auditorium last night demanded collective economic action against "aggressor," and revisions of American neutrality laws to permit arms shipments to loyalist Spain.

Supported by wall placards echoing their arguments, a succession of speakers led by Representative Byron Scott (Democrat), of California, denounced Fascism as a "serious danger" to the United States, and pleaded for the cause of democracy in Spain and independence in China.

Representative Scott, chairman of the meeting, introduced a spokesman from each participating organization—ranging from the Communist Party to the District Cooperative League. The delegates excoriated fascism, lauded the Spanish loyalists, advocated collective security and urged revision of the neutrality laws. Among the organizations represented were the Women's Trade Union League, League of Women Voters, American Student Union, Workers' Alliance, Friends of the Abraham Lincoln Battalion and numerous Government unions.

"Soon Be Too Late."

Declaring that "soon it can be too late," Representative Scott pleaded for "economic action" against Fascist aggressors "to forestall the time when we'll have to take military action." In case of ultimate defeat of France and Great Britain by Germany and Italy, Scott asked, "then where will you people be on the Atlantic Coast? The reason the entire American fleet now can mass in the Pacific is that the British fleet patrols the Atlantic."

Visualizing Nazi penetration into South America, Scott warned that "nations in whose business we refuse to interfere are preparing themselves to interfere in our business."

Anna Louise Strong, author and newspaperwoman, declared that "if Spain goes Fascist, South America goes Fascist." She stated that "the Chinese farmers are saying, 'If the Americans could fight nine years for their independence, then so can we.'"

In an impassioned address on the religious aspects of the Spanish struggle, the Rev. Herman J. Reissig, executive secretary of the North American Committee to aid Spanish Democracy, cried out, "You can defend religion and the true church to death, and still say that the Spanish workers had some reason for hostility to their church."

Five Resolutions Adopted.

Dr. Reissig declared that the Spanish workers "never destroyed" a genuine House of God, but "they did destroy certain ecclesiastical centers of reaction." He regretted that "Catholics ask us to unit against decenecy and liberalism in Spain because of their fear of reds."

Five resolutions were unanimously adopted by the audience. They asked: 1, public hearings by the House Foreign Affairs Committee to consider amending neutrality legislation to authorize embargoes against aggressors; (2), general boycott of Japanese goods; (3), amendment of the neutrality acts to permit "normal commercial relations with the recognized democratic government of Spain;" (4) protest to the rebels against bombing civilians, and (5), joint action with other nations to apply "economic and diplomatic sanctions against aggressor nations."

It is not until the third act that the revelation comes of why "You Can't Take It With You" was deemed the best American play of 1937 by the Pulitzer Prize committee.

In this final stanza of the Moss Hart-George S. Kaufman collaboration there is an exposition of homely philosophy and clear thinking that places the New York hit that is still running on Broadway on a parity with James A. Herne's "Shore Acres," Frank Bacon's "Lightnin'" and other native dramas of the same genre in its shrewd apprehension of the stable things that enter into the complex business of sound living.

This impressive display of utter sanity comes as all the more of a surprise since it is predicated upon two preceding acts of hilarious farce that are built upon a ridiculous foundation of complete absurdity.

The Sycamore family is something grotesque and marvelous to behold. They are a divergent group of aimless common folk addicted to an amazing catalogue of hobbies. Granpa Vanderhof, the head of the house, who retired 35 years ago for no better reason than that he thought it a good idea, likes to attend commencement exercises, throw darts at a target and collect stamps and snakes. His children and grandchildren are variously concerned with candy-making, the manufacture of fireworks in the basement, ballet dancing, xylophone playing and the like. With all of these activities going on at the same time, the Sycamore home is a bit of a madhouse.

Has Solid Foundation.

But underlying all this diversity of taste and inclination is a solid groundwork of patience, mutual understanding, tolerance and contentment. It is from this segment of its structure that "You Can't Take It With You" derives its strength. It is an intensely amusing and wholesome comedy that utilizes the sturdy fundamentals of sane living to balance its unabashed resort to all of the theater's perennial frivolities as a means of generating more laughter than a Washington theater has heard in one night in a long succession of seasons.

The "conflict" necessary to the fulfillment of the play's dramatic purpose is occasioned by the introduction to the consummately lunatic Sycamore family of a wealthy Wall street broker and his wife and son, who happens to have fallen in love with one of the less eccentric of the clan. Their tentative betrothal seems definitely headed for the rocks until Grandpa Vanderhof takes matters into his own hands in that thoroughly orthodox last act and expounds his liberal and wholly tenable concepts of what life and happiness are all about.

The sharp contrasting of character and the deft evolvement of situations that are inherently ludicrous render "You Can't Take It With You," to all intents and purposes, actor-proof. That is well, for last night's performance of the farce suggested that in many departments it might have been infinitely better done.

The pivotal character in the play is Grandpa Vanderhof, the amiable and complacent balance-wheel of the Sycamore household. Grandpa Vanderhof is flawlessly impersonated by Aldrich Bowker, an adroit player, who imbues his role with an unaffected naturalness that is as disarming as it is lovable. Mr. Bowker quite dominated the three acts last evening in a role that would be a boon to any seasoned character actor. Eva Condon, as Penelope Sycamore, "Penny," falls heir to one of the farce's richest comedy parts,

Youth Is Outpaced.

It is among the youngsters of the cast that the chief fault lies—if so impregnable a comedy may be said to have a fault. Bobbe Arnst, as the aspirant for honors in the ballet, after eight years of futile training, overplayed judiciously and Ross Hertz was deft as the xylophone artist who insisted on playing a few little things of his own, written by Beethoven! The romantic roles of the young lovers, from the opposite poles of the social scale, suffered by the uninspired reading of Margaret Callahan and Henry Richards. Miss Callahan grew increasingly effective as the play progressed. Mr. Richards, unfortunately, did not.

As the Park avenue callers upon an incomprehensible middle-class family, Charlotte Walker, former Washington stock favorite, and William Roselle were oppressively, but more or less appropriately, affected in all that they said and did. Cynthia Blake made a believable former grand duchess in a comparatively small part in the last act and Frances E. Williams and "Ham Tree" Harrington added their full quota to the laughter, as the two servants in the Sycamore home. Muni Seroff is entitled to top ranking for the excellence of his impersonation of Boris Kolekhov, Russian master of the dance, who had a tough eight-year job on his hands in the person of Essie, the Pavlova of the family. Frederick Forrester, another former Washington favorite, in company with Frank Tweddell, also did full justice to the fireworks industry, as did Emma Bunting to a sprightly comic interval of joyous intoxication.

But singling out individuals from such a roster as this is only a petty form of quibbling. It doesn't matter how "You Can't Take It With You" is played. It would be a resounding hit in the hands of any cast—even one enrolled from any Friday night amateur contest, if there were any more Friday night amateur contests!

Affairs of State Have Robbed Theater Of Prestige of Presidential Patronage

The White House No Longer Inspires a Fanfare and Homage of the Populace as Chief Executive Takes Place in Box; 'Jezebel' Proves a Box-Office 'Smash;' Human 'First-Aid Kit' Saves a Show; Notes.

BELL.

AND there is another thing that militates against the complete glamor—and how we hate that word!—of the theater in the National Capital. Or had you forgotten that yesterday we lamented the passing into the limbo of forgotten things of that gracious gesture known as the curtain speech?

The missing element now seems to be the submergence of the close alliance that used to exist between the White House and the playhouse.

My good friends, Marvin H. McIntyre and Steve Early, of the Presidential secretariat, have made it plain to me that the office of Chief Magistrate of the United States has grown to proportions that no longer permit the casual attendance of the President at all of the theatrical offerings he would like to see. The affairs of State are a tremendous burden. There is little time that can be taken out by the President to do those things which he would most like to do.

The fact nevertheless remains that the absence of the Chief Executive from the Presidential box, month in and month out, has deprived the theater in Washington of one of its chief sources of a claim to unique prestige and an appeal to public interest for which there is no substitute.

In the earlier days of Theodore Roosevelt, William Howard Taft, Woodrow Wilson, Warren Gamaliel Harding, and Calvin Coolidge, the Executive Mansion, intentionally or not, lent the theater of the living drama an impetus it never since has enjoyed in the Capital.

There was a bit of pomp and circumstance in the attendance of the President at the theater. The audience—a foreword of Presidential attendance always somehow leaks out—invariably was tense and just a little excited. The orchestra was on its toes, in a manner of speaking. Upon the entrance of the White House party, the musicians always struck into the inspiring tones of the National Anthem; the audience came to its feet; the President stood in the stage box and took innumerable bows, then was seated to the huzzas of the crowd and the show was on!

It was an electric and a memorable moment in the theater.

There are those, of course, who profess to believe that this was all a relic of monarchial observances that had no place in a free republic. I always felt otherwise about it. The President of the United States, after all, is the President of the United States. His presence at the theater always has been a stimulus to those on both sides of the footlights.

The first Roosevelt was an inveterate theatergoer. So was President Taft. President Wilson's addiction to the theater—especially vaudeville—is almost a Capital legend. President Harding also was not among those who ignored the lure of the footlights. Herbert Hoover kept his love of the theater a little more in curb. Never during his four-year incumbency of the White House did he attend a theatrical performance, to the best of my knowledge. President Coolidge made a slightly better record, but still not one comparable to those of "Teddy" and Taft and Wilson.

President Roosevelt, I believe, has attended two performances at the National during the five years of his Administration. It is a lamentable circumstance that official imposts have not permitted him a greater indulgence in a form of entertainment he loves.

In company with many other habitues of the theater, this column would be thrilled at another opportunity to rise to the strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" as the President entered his box and took his bows.

We seem to have a vague recollection of having written for last Saturday's paper, concerning "Jezebel," current at the Earle Theater, that "It is not a pleasant recital of human events that is recounted in this film play of the New Orleans of the 1850's. It is, however, a powerful and a gripping one that will leave a deep impression upon the consciousness of thoughtful theatergoers." Washington seems to be populated by "thoughtful theatergoers," for those Saturday words, by some strange miracle, have come completely true. "Jezebel" is proving to be a record-breaking attraction, not only in Washington, but in Baltimore. According to Warner Brothers Zone Manager John J. Payette, this story of the Old South gave the Earle its biggest week-end since "The Awful Truth." At the Ambassador, where it is the early week feature, it rolled up the most imposing Sunday business since the Irene Dunne-Cary Grant comedy, already referred to. At the Stanley Theater, in Baltimore, Manager Rodney Collier reports to the home office the biggest Saturday business on record since the Warners assumed control of the house. "Jezebel," one begins to suspect, must be a pretty good picture. As a matter of fact, we were of that opinion from the first minute we saw it.

* * * *

That was a pretty fine week that "You Never Know" did at the National for the seven days ending last Saturday night. What the exact receipts were, I happen not to know, but they were "'way up there"—owing in part, of course, to the $3.30 top in the orchestra.

Not in recent months has this parapet of prognostication—if that is what it is—been assailed by so many inquiries as in the matter of why we liked "You Never Know." A great many customers seemed to be disappointed in it. They were the ones who attended in the belief that they were to see an "old line" musical comedy—undraped, uncurbed in its humor and altogether in the legendary manner of frisky musical revues.

"You Never Know," needless to say, was not that sort of entertainment. It became a little ribald in spots, to be sure, but in essence it was a thoroughly accurate and smooth-flowing musical transcription of "By Candlelight," a comedy that has been sure-fire ever since its first production in Vienna. It also was successful as a picture starring Paul Lukas and, I think, Elissa Landi.

The mere fact that it was not another "Follies" does not mean that it was not good in its class.

* * * *

Incidentally, if the thespian's first-aid kit, wrapped up in a human form known by the name of Dr. Frank T. Shyne, hadn't been on the job last week, there probably would not have been any "You Never Know" to regale local audiences. Clifton Webb was a little more than threatened with a streptoccus throat; Libby Holman was in a bad way and other members of the cast suffered all sorts of pulmonary ills. Dr. Shyne, by his backstage ministrations, managed to keep the show on and seems to deserve these modest words of approbation for salvaging another fine attraction.

* * * *

In passing, there was more to Libby Holman's nervousness a week ago last night than met the eye in her first appearance in the Cole Porter musical. Not only was she making her first, first-act entrance with a new song, never before sung on any stage, but she also was making that entrance under other veiled handicaps. It seems there are some pernicious letter-writers in the Capital and that they vented their spleen upon Miss Holman by mail. She wasn't quite sure of what was going to happen when she emerged upon the stage. What did must have been a comfort to her.

* * * *

There have been rumors that Miss Holman is going to drop out of the cast of "You Never Know," because she has been told that her continuance in her present comparatively minor role might prove prejudicial to the future of her small son and his inheritance from those tobacco millions. One hopes this may all prove to be a lot of the well-known old balderdash.

* * * *

So those previews of which we were complaining in this space yesterday have been altered a bit.

Instead of viewing "The First Hundred Years"—they are the hard ones, you will remember—on Wednesday afternoon, the Warners have pre-empted the time for an unwinding of "Bluebeard's Eighth Wife," costarring Claudette Colbert and Gary Cooper. That still leaves three fillums to be gazed at in advance, which is enough on any man's calendar!

Milk Cart Carries Barrymore to Job

John Barrymore went to work in a milk wagon!

This doesn't signify that the actor with the famous profile is peddling milk, nor does it imply that he was early on the job. As a matter of fact, he was late.

On his way to begin the portrayal of his role of Inspector Nielson in "Bulldog Drummond's Peril," Barrymore's automobile was halted by a flat tire. The star grabbed a ride with the first motorist that stopped in response to his vigorous thumbing, and that driver was a milkman.

One of the cars that passed Barryraymore was driven by Michael Brooke, otherwise known as the Earl of Warwick, who was playing the role of Barrymore's secretary. He's still explaining how he failed to recognize Barrymore!

Pilots in Motion Picture Form Club

Hollywood's men with wings, the stunt pilots who anonymously put the thrills in flying pictures, announced last week they will organize a club to work in the latest aviation epic, "Men With Wings."

A group of 26 pilots are working on the production, being produced and directed in Technicolor by William A. Wellman. Among these are Frank Clark, "Ace" Brugmiller, Tex Rankin, Frank Tomick, Herb White, Ray Crawford, Dick Randall, Robbie Robinson, Howard Batt, Jerry Phillips, Bob Blair, Chubby Gordon, Jerry Andrews, James Barwick, Walter Quinton and Stanley Hicks.

Plans are being made to call the organization "Men With Wings," with Wellman, former war flier, as honorary president.

HEDDA HOPPER.

Hollywood, Calif., March 28.—Hollywood mourns the passing of Oscar C. Apfel, an old timer who helped us all. He directed "The Squaw Man," and made pictures at the Old Barn at Sunset and Vine, where N. B. C. is building a miniature radio city. The next advancing step will be television, which no one here talks about. But it hangs over the head of each studio like the sword of Damocles. Producers refuse to see it. But believe me, it will soon kick the top off—just as Al Jolson did off silent pictures when he fell to his knees and sang "Mammy." Time marches on.

Mr. Apfel was a forerunner of Cecil B. DeMille—maker of "epics." Cecil is still one of the great showmen of the world today. He dreams history into old stories—puts new stars, personalities, costumes into swing, sin and syncopation, which seems vitally necessary today. In "The Buccaneer," he even got in the American flag which George M. Cohan has made popular since the day of his birth.

Mr. Apfel directed the first picture I ever made. I was leading lady opposite William Farnum, one of the finest men I ever knew. It was called "Battle of Hearts," an original story by Frances Marion. Our friendship began then—is stronger today.

The entire film was taken on, under or near the water. I was terrified of water—still am. When I was still a brat, my older sister thought she'd have fun. While teaching me to swim, she tripped me—some one tripped her—but I stayed on the bottom longer than she. I never lost my fear of choking. But I was so flattered when asked to do the picture, I did forget, but not for long.

Our first tragedy descended after we arrived on Catalina Island. The Fox Co. bought an old schooner—put two men aboard to sail it down from San Francisco for our use. They reckoned without our California storms. The two men and boat have never been heard of since.

A fishing village built on the island, blew down three times. It was there that I drove my first and last team of oxen. I was the dressy type, wearing men's pants, army sweater and stocking cap.

But we had to have a boat. The only available one was going in the opposite direction to Santa Cruz Island for another picture. So we engaged it when the other picture was finished. Bag and baggage, we moved from Catalina to Santa Cruz. The only other woman along was Mrs. Apfel. We added two Catalina deep-sea divers to keep me from drowning! Names Squirrel and Black Joe and I always look them up when I go to Catalina.

We arrived at Santa Cruz after dark—to discover there was no landing beach. We were taken off the big boat and rowed ashore, then waited for a wave to wash us on a flat rock, grabbed a swinging ladder and in that way landed. Mrs. Apfel and I made it safely. But Farnum, two other actors and three cameras weren't so lucky. Their boat capsized. They knocked their heads against rocks, which they realized were washed out caves. After great difficulty they were rescued. The only bottle of brandy we had along for an emergency proved inadequate to calm their jitters and language.

Mrs. Apfel and I immediately put on aprons and went to work cooking ham, eggs, coffee and toast for the crowd which numbered 35. We weren't expected until the following day. No provisions had been made for us.

Later that night we shared a tent and blankets which dogs and goats had nestled in during the winter.

Irving Berlin, world-famed composer, has a stand-in piano for the renowned instrument on which he composed "Alexander's Ragtime Band," around which a stirring drama is being filmed. Berlin seldom uses the stand-in, since it doesn't have the tone and touh of the original instrument.

This Morning

Baugh Seems All Set With Cardinals.

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 28. — Here in the camp of the St. Louis Cardinals, Samuel Adrian Baugh—"Slingin' Sammy"—is beginning to command new respect and the Washington Redskins are in the process of losing the No. 1 football player of the National Professional League.

POVICH.

The Cardinal bosses who two weeks ago were screwing their faces in derision at the mention of Baugh as a prospective big leaguer are now recent and enthusiastic converts. Slingin' Sammy has a future in the big leagues, they say.

And Slingin' Sammy himself must think so, too, because he was saying today that he doubted if he'd rejoin the Washington Redskins next fall in defense of the league championship he helped 'em win with his passes.

Idling in his room at the Cardinals' hotel between practice sessions, the tall Texan drawled his doubts that he would wear a Redskin uniform when the 1938 football season starts.

"Ah'm beginning to hit good pitching down here," said Baugh, "and baseball is mah game. Baseball in the summer and football coaching job in the fall, that'll probably be mah schedule. There's more in it for me. Ah can sign a football coaching contract tomorrow if I like."

Undergoes Transformation.

It seems that Slingin' Sammy has undergone a speedy and almost complete transformation in the camp of the Cardinals. The Gas House gang bosses who were disposed to dismiss the tall third baseman lightly two weeks ago are now toying with the notion that he will be a regular infielder, honest.

"Why, he's a better ball player right now than I was when I broke into the majors," said Manager Frankie Frisch. "At least, as a fielder, he is. He made some plays against the Yankees last week at third base that any fellow could be proud of. He's got action out there and the best throwing arm on the club." But it is Baugh's sudden sprouting as a hitter that has sent Frisch into ecstacies. Playing against the Yankees last week, Baugh slammed out a two-bagger and two singles.

"I thought he was the rawest thing I had ever seen at bat," said Frisch. "When he came to us, it looked to me as if he didn't even know how to hold a stick. With all that power of his, he was a slap hitter, and I was ashamed of him.

"I didn't know that he was easing up at bat on account of that bum shoulder he suffered in the Redskins' exhibition tour. I thought it was his natural swing. But now that shoulder of his is okay. He's got a long follow-through and he can pound that ball into leftfield as far as Joe Medwick or anybody on the club."

Frisch did not go so far as to say that Baugh would be a regular with the Cardinals this season, but baseball men in Florida will not be surprised if Baugh is in the opening-game line-up. Ray Garibaldi, the club's other third baseman, is suffering from a lame back and Baugh at this writing is tops among the third sackers.

May Be Farmed Out.

The worst fate that can befall Baugh this season it seems is to be farmed out to the Cardinals' Rochester or Columbus clubs in an AA league for future reference.

"And Ah'll make as much money in the big minors this season as Ah can in pro football," said Baugh, who is nothing if not a stark materialist. "Counting what the Cardinals gave me as a bonus for signing, my baseball salary will be more than Ah made in football last year."

Baugh revealed that the Redskins have already made him a salary offer for 1938—the same wage he received last year—$6,000.

"Gee whizz," said Baugh, "what does a fellow have to do to make good in that football league. Ah figured they'd give me a big raise, but they didn't. We won't be such a hot club, anyway, without Cliff Battles. And is that true that he only got $2,750 for playing with us last year?

"That's a crime. Cliff was the best player in the whole league, too. Ah guess Ah better get out of this pro football. There's not enough money in it."

Baugh revealed two other facts:

1 That he has the Cardinals permission to play in the All-Star football game at Chicago in August, and

2. That Capt. Turk Edwards of the Redskins will not return to the Washington club unless they double his salary.

Apology Written By Walter O'Hara

Pawtucket, R. I., March (AP).—Walter E. O'Hara, former managing director of Narragansett race track and former publisher, today publicly apologized to Gov. Robert E. Quinn, of Rhode Island, with whom he engaged in a long and bitter controversy before resigning as a track official and selling his newspaper.

In a letter to the Governor, made public by O'Hara's local office, the former race track official said:

"In various issues of my newspaper, the Star Tribunte, and over the radio, I made certain statements which reflected upon the character and integrity of you, your family and certain associates. Those statements were misleading and without foundation in fact. They were made by me without justification and to serve my own purpose. For all those statements I hereby publicly apologize to you."

Snead Wins Greensboro Open Event

Protest Is Overruled; Johnny Revolta Is Second.

By the Associated Press.

Greensboro, N. C., March 28.—Sammy Snead, of White Sulphur Spring, W. Va., burned up the greens and fairways of the Valley Brook course today to win the first annual $5,000 greater Greensboro Golf Tournament with a brilliant 72-hole score of 271.

P. G. A. officials said Snead's mark set a new low record for a major golf tournament during the current campaign. His 271 was two strokes better than the 273 with which Ed Dudley, of Augusta, Ga., sailed home in the Sacramento Open.

Snead, hitting them hard and straight, was three under par for the day. He fired a 69 to win this morning's third round, then came back stronger than ever in the afternoon to take the final round with a sizzling 68.

Johnny Revolta, of Evanston, Ill., whose play was consistently good throughout, finished second with a 276. His 73 was three over par for the third round, but he found his range in the afternoon and toured the rugged layout in a sub-par 69 for a total of 276.

For a time there was some doubt whether Snead's morning round would stand. Paul Runyan, the White Plains, N. Y., pro who played with the long driver from West Virginia, entered a protest because once when one of Sammy's drives landed in a ditch his caddy laid down his bag while guarding the pellet.

However, late in the afternoon a decision by the rules committee of the U. S. G. A. led tournament officials to rule that Snead would not be penalized. Even if he had, it would have made no difference in the result of the tourney since only a two-stroke penalty could have been imposed.

Runyan with a 72-70 and Ralph Guldahl, of Chicago, with a 73-68 for the last day, finished in a tie for third and fourth places with 281 each. They were tailed by two strokes by Denny Shute, of West Newton, Mass., the P. G. A. champion who posted a 67-72 to give him a four round total of 283.

Next came Harry Cooper, called in many quarters the best second place finisher in the country, with a 67-74 for a 284. Right on his heels four sharpshooters were in a huddle at 285. They were Ben Hogan, of White Plains, N. Y.; Orville White, of Grenesboro; Bobby Cruickshank, of Richmond, Va., and Horton Smith of Chicago.

Virginia Golfers To Select Dates

Richmond, Va., March 28 (AP).—The Virginia State Golf Association will select sites and dates for the State amateur and open tournaments and the State women's tournament at its annual meeting Saturday at Newport News.

W. F. Souder, of Charlottesville, president of the association, said today that Virginia Beach and Hot Springs appear as the chief possibilities as the site for the amateur tournament, while the course for the State open remains problematical, although the Old Dominion Golf Club of Newport News stands ready to accept it.

The Richmond Women's Golf Association has put in a bid for Richmond as the site for the women's tournament and has recommended the tournament be conducted early in October. Souder said he felt sure that the State association will award the woen's tournament to the Country Club of Virginia if it asks for it.

Ehrensberger Released.

Biloxi, Miss., March 28 (AP).—Bill Ehrensberger, Phils' rookie right-hand pitcher, was released today on option to Baltimore of the International League. Bill played with Beaumont and Sioux City last season.

Police Boys Club Boxers to Compete In Separate Units

Members of the Metropolitan Police Boys Club ring team, which captured the District A. A. U. team championship in the tournament concluded last Saturday night, will compete under their respective precinct banners next year rather than as a single unit, Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police and head of the clubs, indicated lasted night.

This system not only will put the police on a more equal basis with other clubs, but should tend to increase the intense neighborhood rivalry existing between precincts, and thus make more entertaining shows.

"I think it will be advisable to have the various precincts enter their own teams rather than have boys from all clubs enter under the one name." Maj. Brown said. "We don't want an undue advantage over the other clubs, and I think it will be a better tournament if the precincts compete against one another."

Day Beats Speigel.

Pittsburgh, March 28 (U.P.).—Davey Day, 133½, Chicago, tonight knocked down Tommy Speigel, 133, Uniontown, Pa., twice in the second round and won a popular 10-round decision.

Table Tennis Stars to Vie

Bellak and Pagliaro to Play Here Friday.

Topped by the man who has just completed a successful defense of his American championship, an all-star group of table tennis players will come to the Heurich gymnasium Friday night to climax the local season of the popular indoor sport.

Laszlo Bellak, the Hungarian who last Saturday at Philadelphia won the national title for the second successive year, will be the headliner of the troupe, but his supporting cast is only slightly less impressive.

Indeed, many expect Lou Pagliaro, a naturalized citizen who currently is the Bitsy Grant of American table tennis, to give Bellak a run for his money. Although standing slightly more than 5 feet, Pagliaro possesses a driving offense which critics say is one of the best in the game. He did not get the chance to meet Bellak in the nationals, being eliminated in one of the late rounds after a hard scrap.

Accompanying Bellak and Pagliaro will be Sandor Glancz, former coholder of the world's doubles title and more recently coach to World Champion Viktor Barna; Jimmy O'Connor, Florida State champion and a newcomer on the troupe, and Johnny Abrahams, Metropolitan New York champion.

Greenbrier Nine Wins.

Lewisburg, W. Va., March 28.—Greenbrier Military School defeated University School of Cleveland, 10 to 4. Home runs by Pulliam and McFarland with two on base clinching the victory. Harris hit a homer for the visitors. Cleveland pitchers fanned 18.

Wake Forest Wins.

Wake Forest, N. C., March 28 (AP). Playing errorless ball and making hits count for runs, Wake Forest defeated Richmond, 8 to 2, in a baseball game today.

Duke Netmen Lose.

Durham, N. C., March 28 (AP).—The Williams College tennis team outlasted Duke University's netters in a marathon match today, setting back the Blue Devils, 5—4.

Terp Nine Swamps Vermont; Invaders Given Only 3 Hits

Maryland Team Combines Great Pitching With 15-Hit Attack to Open Season Well.

By Jack Munhall.

Combining a 15-hit attack with the 3-hit pitching of Charley Weidinger, Earl Springer and Bill Steiner, Maryland University launched its baseball campaign yesterday, walloping the University of Vermont, 16 to 4, before 1,000 students at College Park.

The Terps were forced to come from behind to swamp the conqueror of Navy. The Cats had hopped off to a 1-0 lead in the first inning before the Terps dispelled any doubts as to the eventual winner by slamming over seven runs in the second.

From then on it was just a question of how many runs Maryland would make. For the Terps teed off with great success against a pair of Vermont pitchers who were helpless in view of the poor support given by their mates. The Cats kicked in with six errors and several questionable plays to keep alive the Maryland rallies.

Support Lacking.

In the second, especially, Lefty Pesarik could have sued his Vermont fielders for nonsupport, for they bobbled four times as the Terps fashioned their runs from four hits and a pair of walks.

Meanwhile, the Cats were getting nowhere in great haste with the subtle slants of Weidinger, who yielded but two safeties in his three innings of toil. And then Springer took up the burden and proved even tougher than his predecessor. In fact, Mr. Springer was most impressive, with the exception of the fourth inning, when he appeared nervous and walked two batters and hit a third.

After his inauspicious start, Springer was virtually unhittable as he mixed a fast ball with a bewildering curve. Steiner, a sophomore, finished the game and also looked good. So good that Coach Burt Shipley has revised his plans to allow him to start against Ohio State today.

Two Hitters Found.

Maryland uncovered a pair of youngsters who look like real hitters Hugh Keller, younger brother of Charley, and a reserve catcher, Robert Burns, gladdened Shipley's eye with their stickwork. Keller, an 18-year-old sophomore, rapped out a double and single in two tries before yielding his rightfield position to Lefty Chumbris.

Burns, replacing Joe Crisafulli in the third frame, smacked a single and a tremendous triple in three trips.

Bill Bryant, the Terps' leading batter last season, still retains his eye as three singles in five tries will attest. Weidinger and Springer, surprisingly enough, each enjoyed a perfect day at the plate with a pair of singles.

Maryland meets Ohio State in baseball this afternoon at 4 o'clock at College Park, while the lacrosse ten opens its season with Swarthmore at 3:30.

Griffs Lose To Reds by 3-to-0 Count

Cascarella Holds Nats Safe as Mates Fall on Monte Weaver.

By Shirley Povich.
A Staff Correspondent.

Tampa, Fla., March 28.—The Nats continued the evil tenor of their ways again today and took a 3-to-0 beating from the Cincinnati Reds. It was administered quickly—in an hour and 19 minutes—but it was not painless because each of the first six innings carried a sting.

Those six innings were pitched for the Reds by Joe Cascarella, the grinning right-hander whom the Nats discharged for incompetency last season. Cascarella was plenty competent today as he faced his old pals. When he left the game the Nats had no runs, only five hits—all singles—and had been able to move only two men as far as third base.

Cascarella laid it on heavily against his old mates. When he wasn't making goofs of the Nats with his curve-ball pitching, he was up there at the plate with a bat in his hands banging out base hits. He made only two hits because he went to bat only twice, but he drove in an important run in the second inning.

Later in the game, big Paul Derringer took over the Reds' pitching and followed the example of Cascarella in turning back the Nats scoreless. Three of their eight hits the Nats collected against Derringer in the last three innings.

At the finish the Nats had 18 consecutive nothings to show for their batting efforts for the last two days because it seems that yesterday they were shut out for nine innings by a pair of Boston Bees' throwers.

Monte Weaver opposed Cascarella in the box for five innings and while he was no rousing success, he was no miserable failure, either. He gave up nine hits, but only 2 runs to the Red Legs, who are something of a sensation in the Grapefruit League with their six straight victories over American League teams. Elon Hogsett yielded up the other Cincinnati run in the eighth.

It was no fault of big Zeke Bonura's that the Nats did not figure in the ball game except as push-overs for the Reds. Large Zeke flailed the ball solidly all afternoon and in his last two times at bat valiantly attempted to start something with a pair of well-tagged singles, but he was left holding the bag—or bags, as it were.

McCormick Starts Scoring.

Frank McCormick, a first baseman who, like Lou Gehrig and Hank Greenberg, sprung from the Bronx, launched the run-scoring proceedings against Weaver in the second inning with a single to left, and Buddy Myer encouraged them when he made a dismal throw to Travis on a double-play grounder. A run clattered over the plate when Lombardi lifted a double into short left, a second run scored on Cascarella's single to left.

Matters stood at 2-0 until the eighth, when this McCormick, who made three solid hits today, poked one of Hogsett's side-arm pitches into leftfield for a single. He was

Stephenson Sets League Pin Mark

Charles Stephenson, Senate team bowler in the Federal League at Arcadia, marked the final night's play in the league last night by rolling a season's set record of 431. Stephenson also had high game of 168. The 431 set was one pin better than Jerry Cowdon's 430, set early in the season.

G. P. O.'s team rolled high game of 659 and top set of 1,766. General Accounting Office copped the league pennant by a one-game margin over War Department.

Andy Price, of the Hydrographics, set the pace in the Navy Department League at Arcadia with a 138 game and 366 set, while Ordnance accounted for high team game of 579 and Naval Air Station high team set of 1,652.

Schwemmer Drops Bout To Kanner

Jacobs Beats Bill Temes; Ricco and Rubey Win Prelims.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

Amid a deafening chorus of boos, cries of "set-up," "fake," and other highly uncomplimentary remarks, Joey Archibald knocked out Johnny Scibelli in the second of a scheduled 10-round bout last night at the Arena. It was his tenth consecutive victory, locally.

But if the fight was framed the knockout punch wasn't. A short left hook, traveling less than a half-foot, put the snore on Scibelli. His head snapped back as his feet flew out from under him and he went down with a crash. There was nothing faked about that, for when attendants finally got him upright again, he walked on rubbery legs, and his eyes swam dizzily in his head.

It was the Jersey City boy's second trip to the canvas, for Archibald floored him early in the first round, with a looping right high on the forehead, coming out of a clinch. The blow stunned him and struck fear in his heart, and he showed little inclination to continue the fight. As a matter of fact Referee Charley Reynolds had to hestitate after "nine" to save him from a knockout.

Scibelli Shows Little.

Schibelli landed no effective blows. His punches could be counted on your thumb, with half a thumb left over. He was the poorest excuse for an opponent the fans have been forced to swallow in years. Whether he was merely awed by Archibald's presence, frightened or handcuffed with malice aforethought can not be said. Whatever it was, he failed to make even an argument of the alleged fight.

Archibald started quickly, driving both hands to the body and forcing Scibelli into a clinch. The eventual winner backed off, surveyed his man coolly, too frigidly for the comfort of those screaming "fake," and tore back in with both hands to the body. They fell into another clinch, and as Referee Charley Reynolds parted them, Joey lashed out with a wicked right that glanced off the chin and the Italian went down.

The knockout punch struck like a couple of bolts of thunder and carried much authority. Scibelli was industriously protecting his tummy and mid-section when Archibald suddenly shifted tactics, let go with the left hook.

Wins Majority Recision.

The six-round semifinal Murray Kanner won a majority decision over Jimmy Schwemmer, of Baltimore. The decision was roundly booed, but not half as roundly or as loudly as the fight itself. Both lads tried hard enough, but their styles were against them.

Chester Rubey got up off the floor three times in the first round and came back strong in the last three rounds to win the opening four-round preliminary from Al Dintaman.

The same situation prevailed in the following six-rounder, as Tommy Ricco went down for a six count from a right to the button, then rallied to whip Johnny Gilley.

"Stumpy" Jacobs was awarded a majority decision over Bill Temes in another six rounder, thereby taking another step up on the comeback trail. Jacobs was down in the third round, but it was merely a slip, not a knockdown and he boxed nicely thereafter to win.

Police Launch Drive On Gambling at Arena

A drive on open gambling at boxing matches at Turner's Arena was launched last night, but netted only one victim, who was booked on a charge of disorderly conduct. After being fingerprinted and photographed, he was released. He gave the name of Harry Blank, 1228 E street northwest.

An appeal for funds for the Police Boys Club, which is conducting a membership drive, brought $200.89 into the coffers as the audience threw silver, bills and checks into the ring.

Appling Is Lost To Chicago Team For Three Months

Los Angeles, March 28 (AP).—The Chicago White Sox will be without the services of their star shortstop, Luke Appling, for three months.

Manager Jimmy Dykes heard the bad news today from Dr. Robert W King, of the Golden State Hospital, where Applnig was taken yesterday after injuring his right leg in a game against the Chicago Cubs.

"Appling broke both bones of the lower right leg," said Dr. King. "We are are putting the ankle in a cast and Appling will be able to leave the hospital in a few days, but he will not be able to play baseball for three months."

Joe Louis Sharpens Up For Fight With Thomas

Chicago, March 28 (AP).—Joe Louis moves into his final training maneuvers tomorrow in preparation for his 15-round battle with wild-swinging Harry Thomas at the Chicago Stadium Friday night.

Already finely tuned, having lost no sharpness since his bout with Natie Mann last month, Louis set 200 pounds as the weight he expects to carry into the ring. The Brown Bomber did no work today, but plans to pull on the gloves tomorrow and Wednesday.

Yankees and Giants Win Training Camp Exhibition Games

GIANTS, 14, JERSEY CITY, 1.

Baton Rouge, La., March 28 (AP). The New York Giants staged batting practice at the expense of their Jersey City "farm" team today, Hammering out 17 hits and a 14-to-1 victory in an exhibition game.

Hal Lee's homer in the first inning was the only Jersey run. Blondy Ryan and Wally Berger hit homers for the Giants, each with one on base, but the bulk of the scoring came in the fourth inning when eight hits were bunched for seven runs.

New Orleans, March 28 (AP).—There's a fight on for second base position on the Cleveland Indian roster. Manager Oscar Vitt sent Tommy Irwin to the position after benching Johnny Kroner for making two errors in a single exhibition game.

Haines City, Fla., March 28 (AP).—The New York Yankees belted over their Kansas City American Association "farm hand" 14 to 2 today, scoring all their runs in two innings as Bump Hadley and Lee Stine limited the Blues to eight hits.

Kansas City nicked Hadley for a run in the first inning and another in the third. The Yanks then collected six runs in the fourth as Pitcher Branch and Yocke handed out six passes and Joe Glenn and Bill Knickerbocker contributed a single and a double, each with bases full.

Tommy Henrich's homer with two aboard and Red Rolfe's two triples featured an eight-hit, eight-run rally in the sixth.

Avon Park, Fla., March 28 (AP).—After spotting the Toronto Maple Leafs seven runs, the Boston Red Sox closed in such furious fashion today that they gained a 13-9 victory over the International Leaguers.

In the wild eighth inning, during which the Red Sox scored light runs, Joe (Lefty) Sullivan, a Detroit cast-off, passed the first five batters before turning over the Toronto mound to former Red Socker Mike Meola, who was nicked for a four-run homer by Fabrian Gaffke. The latter's triple climaxed Boston's five-run rally in the ninth.

New York, March 25.—Pyrotechnics are expected at today's meeting of the New York Boxing Commission when the punch patriarchs will try to square one of those "eternal triangles" involving champions of three divisions.

One of the worst muddles in mitt memory confront Commissioners Phelan, Brown and Wear, who at times have been called affectionately "Winkum, Blinkum and Nod." And they are right in the middle of the muddle, caught in a cross-fire of invectives hurled by three divisional camps, by the Twentieth Century Club and by sports writers. I wonder how they'll wriggle out.

It seems that the commission recently okayed a 15-round outdoor title scrap in which Barney Ross, welterweight champion, will defend his crown against Henry Armstrong, brown-skinned featherweight ruler, in New York on May 26. That okay exploded like a bomb in the camp of Lou Ambers, lightweight king. Ambers' manager, Charlie Goldman, and Adviser Al Weill had been angling for an outdoor lightweight title fight with Armstrong, one of the biggest drawing cards in the game. Ambers, Goldman and Weill were flabbergasted when Armstrong hurdled the 135-pound division and jumped into the welter ranks. Weill was so incensed that he resigned immediately as matchmaker for the Twentieth Century Club, which had arranged the bout ovar his head and despite his protests.

Then the fun started. Everybody began calling names. The feuding became so serious that you'd think Lammers' Lane was inhabited by the Hatfields and McCoys. New York's cauliflower patch always has been a nasty area in which to reside because there's usually more fighting outside the ring than in it. The patch reeks with phenageling, double-crossing, back-stabbing, etc. Well, sir, after the commission's okay on the Ross-Armstrong meeting, all residents of the patch started scrambling to take sides. New alignments were formed, even among the newspaper people, and there was a grand hurly-burly.

The Ambers faction bellowed that the commission was violating all of its past rulings when it permitted Armstrong to leap the lightweight division and fight Ross without ever qualifying as welterweight challenger by beating some worthwhile 147-pounder like Ceferino Garcia. Ambers supporters yelled that the commission perpetrated this violation because of a "trade" with Promoter Mike Jacobs. They said Jacobs had promised the commission he would stage the Louis-Schmeling heavyweight brawl in New York—despite the anti-Nazi boycott—if the commission would okay the Ross-Armstrong affair.

* * * *

Al Buck, boxing writer of the New York Post, inquired if the commissioners were "tax collectors" or a "governing body" in making the reported "deal." And Wilbur Wood, sports editor of the New York Sun, warned "someone is going to emerge from this situation holding a large, empty bag, and if the boxing commission lets itself be hornswoggled three holders of that bag will be Messrs. Phelan, Brown and Wear."

Goldman and Weill have indicated that they will ask the commission to (1) substitute an Ambers-Armstrong lightweight title fight for the Ross-Armstrong battle, or (2) force Ross and Armstrong to agree in writing that the welterweight victor will defend the 147-pound crown against Ambers within 60 days after May 26, and make both Ross and Armstrong post $10,000 forfeits to guarantee such a meeting.

Meanwhile the Twentieth Century Club faction is roaring that the Ambers outfit simply outsmarted itself by refusing to accept an Armstrong lightweight bout when it was offered—that Goldman and Weill lost the match by jockeying around and trying to get better terms. Bill Farnsworth, the Twentieth Century's new matchmaker, insists that Ambers' board of strategy was offered the match for the last time three weeks ago, and that the match was refused.

* * * *

Goldman and Weill, insist that the Twentieth Century never offered Ambers an "outdoor" title match—that Farnsworth and Promotor Jacobs wanted to stage it "indoors." Hence Ambers couldn't accept because the gate wouldn't be large enough to pay him for risking the title against Armstrong. Farnsworth says he didn't mention whether it would be indoors or outdoors, but that he figured the outdoor site was understood.

In case the commission, under pressure, reverses its okay Tuesday and refuses to sanction the Ross-Armstrong melee, the Twentieth Century may stage it at the new Roosevelt Stadium in Jersey City, which could be arranged to seat 70,000 fans for a fight. Abe Greene, New Jersey commissioner, informed the Twentieth Century that it probably could rent the stadium for "a song," under the circumstances.

Chairman Phelan, of the New York commission, denies that any "trade" was made with the Twentieth Century regarding the Armstrong-Ross and Louis-Schmeling bouts. Thus, apparently, the matter rests until today.

House Enacts Bill Allowing Colleges To Control Boxing

The House yesterday passed without debate a bill which permits colleges and universities to exempt their boxing exhibitions from control of the District Boxing Commission. The measure now goes to the Senate.

If enacted into law, the legislation will save university athletic associations the expense of obtaining operator's licenses, licenses for each of their boxers, and of paying a tax of 5 per cent of their gross receipts to the commission.

Faust Wins, Pays $11.20, At Tropical

Veteran Gallops Home Four Lengths Ahead of My Kin.

By the Associated Press.

Tropical Park, Fla., March 28.—A. G. Tarn, the Winnipeg horseman whose winter purchase, Wise Fox, won Sunday's Louisiana Derby, also basked in the spotlight here this afternoon when his 7-year-old Faust easily accounted for the featured fifth event. Paying $11.20 for $2, the chestnut son of Diavolo stepped the 6 furlongs in 1:11 flat under Ken McCombs to gallop past the wire four lengths clear.

Miss A. Doris' My Kin, favorite in the field of six $3,000 top and $2,500 bottom platers, came along in the short stretch to earn second money by a length over M. San Pedro's Pordina.

Faust, a one-time member of New York's Wheatley Stable, ran back to his promising effort last time out, when, at the longer mile and 60 yards distance, he was a good second to the speedy Light.

McCombs, one of the most effective riders in these parts, hustled Faust away from the rail position and swung his mount into command in the dash to the turn. Going easily, Faust widened his advantage while racing Pordina into submission. The latter had enough after the final turn and My Kin, moving up steadily under Carroll Bierman, drove into the place position while losing ground to the flying winner. Escohigh could not keep up, but had no trouble beating Tedall and the sluggish Shot Up.

Maebob Scores.

Saving ground while racing along with the favorite, Chancery, Maebob eked out a neck victory in the sixth, decided over the 6 furlongs distance. Chancery was an easy second, with Pretty Busy five lengths behind in the third hole. It was a two-horse affair all the way. Maebob and Chancery alternated in command. Maebob cut the last corner to get his head in front and held on willingly under Tommy May's hard urging. The gelding paid $8.30. Say When was a game fourth after a poor getaway.

Stingy, the $7.50 for $2 favorite, had a hard time winning the 5½-furlong opening contest on today's card. Apprentice C. Hartle got the gelding up on the outside to win by a head, despite the fact that the combination raced all over the track. Temple Fall shook off Broom Tour and, saving ground at the home turn, held on gamely, but just failed to last. He beat the fast closing Bob Charlie by a length and a half for second money. The time was 1:06.

To the delight and, in many cases, surprise of his backers, Julius Caesar received the photo decision over the pacemaking Woodwaac in the second race. Mrs. Payne Whitney's big 3-year-old charged up on the outside and the camera showed the tip of his nose first to the line. Day Is Done finished third, a length behind the pair. Woodwaac first raced Rich Cream into the ground before hooking up in a spirited drive with Julius Caesar, which paid his followers $10.90. Dark May, the choice, could not threaten from fourth position.

Stockboard Wins.

Stockboard, with one educational effort under his belt, uncorked a game effort to account for the purse in the third, a jvenile dash of 4 furlongs. The J. W. Parrish colorbearer, with the good juvenile rider, Mike Sarno, putting up a powerful ride, wore down Spanish Dot in the closing strides to register by a head at odds of $9.40 for $2. Spanish Dot held a daylight lead into the stretch. He saved second money by a length and a half from the fancied Pit Terrier, which found the pace a bit too fast.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—JULIUS CAESAR, $10.90, $6.60, $5.40; WOODWAAC, $10.30, $7.60; DAY IS DONE, $5.30.

JULIUS CAESAR, close up down the backstretch, moved around the field coming for home and, under a punishing drive, got up just in time to receive a photo decision. WOODWAAC went to the front at the break, shook off RICH CREAM and fought it out courageously with the winner right to the wire. DAY IS DONE worked her way forwardly going down the backstretch and finished strongly.

Daily double, Stingy and Julius Caesar, paid $52.50.

THIRD RACE—Four furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 3-year-old maiden colts and geldings. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:17. Off at 3:17½. Winner, J. W. Parrish's ch. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—STOCKBOARD, $9.40, $6.80, $3.00; SPANISH DOT, $3.70, $2.20; PIT TERRIER, $2.20.

STOCKBOARD, outrun the first quarter mile, closed fast in the stretch run to outgame SPANISH DOT at the wire. The latter took command at once, opened up on his field, but was unable to withstand the winner's bid at the end. PIT TERRIER went forwardly all the way and was much the best of the rest. MAEHERO raced evenly. CITY JUDGE closed well in the stretch run. TRAVEL AGENT and SKY BALL had no excuses.

FOURTH RACE—One mile and 60 yards. Purse, $800. For maiden 2-year-olds. Start good for all but CONSIDER ME. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 3:45. Off at 3:47½. Winner, E. R. Bradley's b. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BAR FLY, $5.20, $3.40, $3.10; LOURDES, $3.40, $3.00; STAR MINT, $4.20.

BAR FLY went to the front immediately, opened up a commanding lead down the backstretch, but was under a hard drive to withstand the closing rush of LOURDES. The latter, off slowly, gradually improved her position while saving ground on the rail going down the backstretch, then circled the field coming into the stretch and was gaining on the winner with every stride. STAR MINT, following in close pursuit of the winner, weakened in the final drive.

FIFTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $1,000; claiming. The Helen Gallagher. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place driving. Went to post at 4:14. Off at 4:15½. Winner, A. G. Two-dollar mutuels paid—FAUST, $11.20, $4.00, $3.20; MY KIN, $3.10, $2.50; PORDINA, $4.40.

FAUST went to the front with a rush, held his field safe for speed and widened with every stride, winning with ease. MY KIN, unable to keep up with the fast early pace, moved up on the outside and easily disposed of PORDINE. The latter broke forwardly, followed in closest pursuit of the winner, but faltered when the final drive came. ESCOHIGH, lacking her usual speed, moved up menacingly in the stretch, but weakened the last sixteenth. TEDALL and SHOT UP were always outrun.

SIXTH RACE—Six furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 4:42. Off at 4:44. Winner, Mrs. W. H. Cane's ch. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MAEBOB, $8.30, $4.50, $3.00; CHANCERY, $4.00, $2.60; PRETTY BUSY, $3.90.

MAEBOB assumed a slight lead the first half mile, gave way to CHANCERY at the quarter pole, but slipped through on the inside rounding for home and was hard pressed to hold his advantage to the end. CHANCERY followed right on the heels of the winner, went to the front after going half a mile, went a trifle wide entering the stretch, but finished gamely. PRETTY BUSY, well up throughout, raced evenly. SAY WHEN, unable to keep pace, closed willingly in the stretch drive. STRANGE TIMES had no excuses.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $900; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:12. Off at 5:15½. Winner, H. G. Shoemaker's blk. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—BACK FENCE, $11.50, $6.40, $4.70; GEORGIA MEADEN, $13.50, $6.60; SAM WORTHY, $4.60.

PEPPER PATCH was eased off the early pace for half mile, moved up rounding the turn for home, interfered with BACK FENCE leaving the eighth pole and gained the decision by a head, but was disqualified when a claim of foul was lodged and allowed. BACK FENCE, well in hand the early part of the running, assumed command at the quarter pole and but for interference suffered would have won. GEORGIA MEADEN gradually worked her way up through the field throughout the running, but was not the equal of the first two. SAM WORTHY showed speed for a half mile, and weakened in the last furlong. CENTENNIAL quit after going about three-quarters of a mile.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $900; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good for all but COLOR BEARER. Won driving; place same. Went to post at 5:47. Off at 5:49. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MISS TAD, $14.30, $7.80, $4.50; BULL MARKET, $16.00, $6.50; FAR CRY, $3.80.

MISS TAD went to the front at once, opened up a commanding lead on her field, but was strongly ridden out to the finish. BULL MARKET, off slowly, rushed into contention at the half-mile pole and held the rest of the field safe. FAR CRY, away slowly, gradually improved his position and wore BERRY PATCH down in the last strides.

sacrificed to second and came trotting home on Myers' single to center.

Bonura led off the ninth with a single to center, but most of the ideas the Nats had of staging a productive rally vanished when Al Simmons grounded to second base to start a game-clinching double play.

The Nats have now played six exhibition games with major league clubs and have been shut out in three of them. The fact that Bucky Harris today placed on the field the team that represents his peak hitting strength lends little comfort to the Nats manager.

Tomorrow the Nats move to Winter Haven for a game with the Columbus Club, of the American Association, and on Wednesday they roll into Lakeland to battle the Tigers.

Derby Hopes See Action in Bowie Races

Maryland Track Draws 15 Cadidates for Kentucky Classic.

Fifteen candidates for the Maryland Derby will be tried and tested during the Southern Maryland Agricultural Association's 12-day meeting, which opens at Bowie on Friday.

The Derby candidates who are already quartered in this State en route by train and motor van for the opening of the 1938 Eastern season are A. C. Compton's Sun Egret, Maj. Ral Parr's Legal Light and King Pharamond, Bomar Stable's Benjam and Billmar, Belair Stud's Wise Fox, Mrs. Emil Denemark's Blind Eagle, Cleaveland Putnam's Bold Robber, Alvin Untermyer's Chaps and Torchlight, J. Shirley Riley's Stephen Jay, William Elder's Walkaway, John J. Farrell jr.'s Brown Moth, Millsdale Stable's Garry and Alfred G. Vanderbilt's Liberty Scout.

While the majority of trainers handling Derby candidates will confine their efforts to 3-year-old races, such does not apply to H. Guy Bedwell and Hugh Dufford.

Bedwell has named A. C. Compton's Sun Egret for the $5,000 Southern Maryland Handicap on April 13 and the $3,500 Bowie Handicap on April 9, both races for 3-year-olds and upward. Dufford has named Alvin Untermyer's Chaps and Torchlight for the $5,000 Southern Maryland Handicap.

Second at Santa Anita.

Sun Egret and Legal Light finished second and third, respectively, to Stagehand in the $50,000 Santa Anita Derby the past winter. Since coming here, Sun Egret has been showing fine speed, proving that the long trip from California didn't injure him in any way.

It is expected that Race Secretary Jack Campbell will book a special race for 3-year-olds later in the meeting, so that the Derby candidates can get a stiff test over a distance of ground before leaving for Churchill Downs. Present plans call for several of the Derby hopes to race here and then go direct to Matt Winn's course in Kentucky.

Bedwell, who plans to send both Sun Egret and Legal Light to Kentucky for the Derby, is casting about for another topnotch rider. Bedwell already has Al Shelhammer under contract, but is desirous of securing another topnotch knight of the saddle.

Milton on the Scene.

Starter Jim Milton's ground crew is schooling horses daily out of the stall gate, which is located in the three-quarter mile shute. They report few bad actors on the grounds, this despite the fact that there are more than 900 horses occupying stalls.

General Manager Joseph B. Boyle, who daily motors down from Baltimore, says that practically every private box has been sold for the meeting. He also reports a big reserved seat sale for opening day and all signs point to the sport of kings receiving a royal welcome from its thousands of subjects on Friday.

Pari-Mutuel Manager Mort Mahony, who got in today from Florida, announces he will offer the daily double on the first and second races.

Seabiscuit Tops 24 Thoroughbreds For Bay Meadows

Fight Managers, Fans Assail Ratings of the National Boxing Body

J. Archibald Not in First 10 Bantams

Sarron, Bob Tow, Blair Not Ranked by Association.

Quarterly ratings released yesterday by the National Boxing Associatin unloosed a barrage of telegrams and phone calls upon the ratings committee, headed by Heine Miller, secretary of the District Boxing Commission. And Joey Archibald, the midget mauler who met Johnny Scibelli last night at the Arena, was on hand to protest in person at being excluded from the first 10 of the bantamweights.

"I think I should have been in the first 10, at least," he said rather hotly after stepping off the scale at the weighing-in ceremonies. "I'm confident I can beat any of them from Johnny Morgan, whom you rated fourth, down to Johnny King in the tenth position, and I know I'd give the others plenty of action for their money."

He seemed to have a good argument, but couldn't pick a fight with Miller, who adroitly pointed out that the ratings were based on actual fights, not form, challenges, or popular opinion.

"I feel sure you could not only get in the first 10 but get a high rating, Joey, if you'd only fight some of the boys listed, Miller replied. But, you know yourself, you haven't been fighting and we had nothing to rate you on, while the others have been working on an average of every three weeks. Go out and fight them, and if you whip them we'll rank you, don't worry about that."

Frankie Blair's manager wired to know why his boy was not rated, and one wire from the South inquired by Petey Sarron was ignored in the lightweight division. Another party called to ask why Bob Tow, who drew with Red Burman, was left out in the cold while Burman was rated eighth among the heavyweights.

Blair was not rated because of defeats at the hands of Fritzie Zivic and Vittorio Venturi, and a draw with Lambertine Williams. Tommy Bland later knocked off Zivic, sealing Blair's hopes of being included among the top ten.

Sarron could not be considered for a position because he has fought no outstanding lightweights since stepping up to that division, while Tow was not recognized because of his knockout by Eddie Hogan, who was kayoed by Buddy Baer, who, in turn, was flattened by Gunnar Barlund. That's going a long way to exclude Tow, but that's the way the committee operates. Barlund, incidentally, was ranked fifth.

It is interesting to note that Saverio Turiello, who defeated Johnny Lucas and Andrea Jesserun in two appearances here, was ranked second, behind Ceferino Garcia, who steadfastly refused to box the Italian despite repeated challenges. Also worthy of note is Phil Furr's rating as the eighth-ranking welterweight.

Young Corbett 3d was awarded the No. 1 challenger's position in the middleweight class ahead of Fred Apostoli, whom he outpointed in a 10-round bout at San Francisco not so long ago. In the heavyweight division Max Baer is rated the third leading challenger by virtue of his decision over Tommy Farr.

Vermonter Slides to Safety

-:- Facts and Faces -:-

What has happened to Harry Fiddesop, local fight trainer and friend of everyone connected with the ring? . . . He was not to be seen in the recently completed A. A. U. tournament, although he was willing to work in what would have been his eighth straight amateur event . . . One story has it that a boxing inspector barred him from further work at the arena on the night that Buck Everett was awarded a technical knockout over Murray Kanner when the latter was standing on his feet after a five count . . . According to the story received from a reliable source, Fiddesop shouted to the referee not to let Buck hit the stricken fighter again . . . It was then that the inspector was said to have told Fiddesop he'd never be permitted to work in a fighter's dressing room again . . .

Well, St. John's Basketball Team arives here today after its losing but game attempt to win the National Catholic title . . . too bad it had to lose after apparently escaping the old "Indian sign" in its first round game with St. Stephen's Mission . . . Did you notice the Mission line-up . . . at forwards were Yellow Otter, Wanstall (a furriner, no doubt) and White Bull . . . at center, White Man and, at guards, White Antelope and Fast Horse . . . but they weren't so speedy . . . Hugh Keller, Maryland's soph baseball find, idolizes big brother Charley, who left the Old Line school to lead the International League in batting . . . Hugh, a pretty good hitter in his own right, uses a Louisville slugger bat, indorsed by Charley . . .

Out of 16 big league pilots who began their careers as player-managers, possibly only one will be seen in that role this season . . . he is Joe Cronin, Red Sox shortstop . . . Jimmy Dykes, Chisox, and Jimmy Wilson, Phils, probably will play occasionally, but both are about ready to do their thinking from a sitting position . . . Others who started their master-minding on the field are Frankie Frisch, Cards; Bucky Harris, Nats; Mickey Cochrane, Tigers; Bill Terry, Giants; Connie Mack, A's; Pie Traynor, Bucs; Charlie Grimm, Cubs . . . Speaking of managers, Bill McKechnie's case is interesting . . . Now considered one of the smartest baseball men in the game, Bill gained the top without ever playing major league ball or even managing a minor league club . . . He went South one year with the Pittsburgh Pirates, was released and then recalled the following year to take charge of the team . . . since, he has managed the Cards, Bees and now the Reds.

This may not mean a thing, but it struck us funny . . . the sports department has just received a press release from Mar Vista, Calif., enclosed in an envelope bearing the letterhead of a jockey club in Hialeah Park, Hialeah, Fla.

If Joe Turner, as was announced, decide to stage an all-Indian wrestling card, he probably will have to recruit George Marshall and Jack Espey, of the Washington Tribe . . . for there are only six real redskins known to be grunting to keep the wolf from growling.

Only Waivers May Save Paul Dean From Minor Berth

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 28 (AP).—Branch Rickey disclosed today the St. Louis Cardinals probably will release Paul Dean to one of their minor league farms.

Rickey said Paul, whose sore arm has been one of the major Redbird headaches for two seasons, has applied to Baseball Commissioner Landis for reinstatement and that, as soon as it is granted, the Cards will ask waivers on him. If no waivers are received Paul will be transferred to a farm team.

At present Paul, who is 25 years old, is on the voluntary retired list. He must be reinstated to the active list before waivers may be asked.

Mrs. Page's Subpar Golf Leads Event

Cuts Five Strokes Off Standard Figures at Pinehurst.

By the Associated Press.

Pinehurst, N. C., March 28.—Mrs. Estelle Lawson Page, of Chapel Hill, fired a sensational 69, 5 strokes under women's par, today in the qualifying round of the North and South's women's invitation golf tourney, which she won last year.

Scoring an eagle 2 on the outward nine, the national champion clipped two strokes off regulation figures with a 34, and homeward bound, she fired a 35, 3 under par.

On the par 4 400-yard third hole, Mrs. Page was favored by the wind and got off a 275-yard drive. She used a mashie to sink her second.

Dorothy Kirby, the Atlanta school girl, who beat Mrs. Page last year for the Southern championship, took 39 to the turn, but rallied and came home in 34 for a fine 73. Kathryn Hemphill, of Columbia, S. C., put together a 37-39 for a 76.

Robert E. Harlow, former tournament manager for the Professional Golfers Association, said the 69 shot by Mrs. Page established a record for competitive play by a woman golfer.

A check of records showed, however, that both Mrs. Glenna Collett Vare, six times United States champion, and Enid Wilson, the British star, had registered 69's in competition.

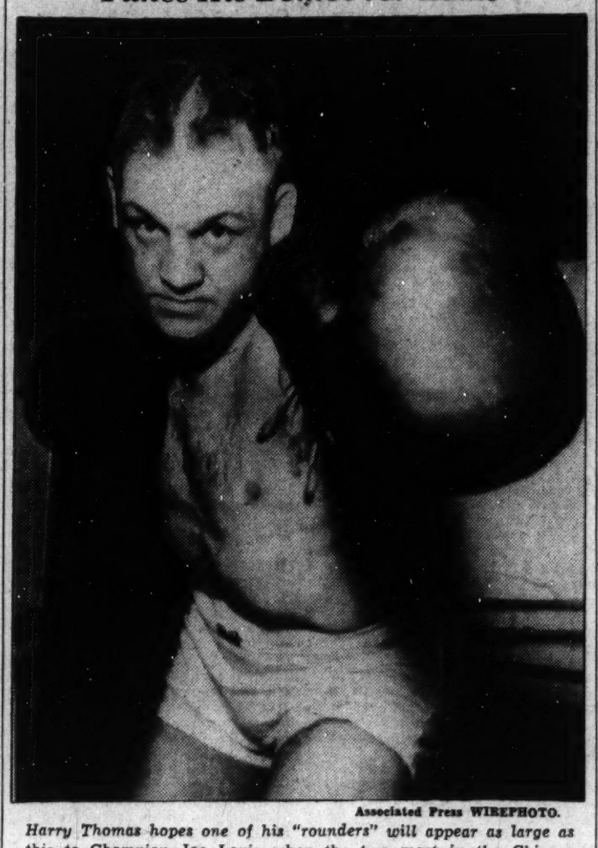
Tunes His Bombs for Louis



Associated Press WIREPHOTO.

Harry Thomas hopes one of his "rounders" will appear as large as this to Champion Joe Louis when the two meet in the Chicago Stadium ring Friday night in a heavyweight title bout.

Bob Gregory On Mat Card

Sir Ronald Lindsay May Attend Bouts.

Bob Gregory, "cruiserweight" wrestling champion of Britain, and his wife, the former Princess Baba, daughter of the white Rajah of Sarawak, will arrive in town early Thursday morning, giving Gregory plenty of time to rest for his bout that night with Tony Calasino. Efforts to get the couple here before then for an interview failed because of previous bookings.

Gregory is cofeatured on the same card with "Crusher" Casey, world champion (of the Bowser circuit) who tangles with Gino Garibaldi in a one-fall match. Both Gregory and the champion are expected to win.

The Princess will stop at the Mayflower Hotel and her presence at the ringside is expected to lure Sir Ronald Lindsay, British Ambassador, to the arena for the festivities. Gregory never goes to the mat unless his blonde wife is in or near his corner, and you'd be surprised how it helps.

Meanwhile Promoter Joe Turner completed his supporting card last night with three 30-minute matches. Joe Cox will meet Henry Graber in the semifinal, while Cliff Olsen battles Len Macaluso and Bert Rubi faces Ralph Garibaldi, Gino's little brother.

Casey, incidentally, will defend the crown he won from Lou Thesz recently at Boston. Thesz had possession of it by virtue of his victory over Everett Marshall. Garibaldi has been around a long time but never in the championship class—although always close to it.

Gregory has an undefeated record to show for his past efforts and a bright future ahead of him, as long as the Princess continues attending his matches.

If you haven't tried PHILLIES you are missing the most enjoyable cigar ever offered in America

GET A WHIFF OF PHILLIES

We asked more than a thousand PHILLIES smokers this question: "What caused you to try your first PHILLIES?" Many of them answered: "We knew PHILLIES must be a fine cigar—but the one thing that made us try it was a whiff of its aroma—so rich and pleasing that we wanted right then to smoke the cigar."

And PHILLIES made good! These smokers said they found it, by far, the most enjoyable cigar they had ever smoked . . . just the cigar they had been looking for.

Light a PHILLIES and get a whiff of its aroma yourself. After the first few puffs you'll know why it is smoked by more men than any other cigar in America. In fact, more than 30 per cent of all cigars sold in some cities are PHILLIES.

Wheat Higher After a Jump At Winnipeg

Advance of Nearly 4 Cents Spurs Buyers in Chicago Pit.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 28.—Nearly 4 cents a bushel sudden jump of Winnipeg quotations for wheat futures had much to do with making Chicago wheat prices today average higher.

An unusual outburst of buying of Winnipeg futures accompanied the Winnipeg wheat market bulge, and was attributed to export interests and to speculators who found themselves embarrassingly short of wheat needed to fill deliveries that had been contracted for. Upturns of Chicago wheat values, however, came only after the market here had touched the lowest levels in three years, a result largely of rains benefiting domestic crops Southwest and West.

At the close, Chicago wheat futures were unchanged to ½ cent higher compared with Saturday's finish, May 86⅛@86¼, July 82⅝@82½, Corn ½ cent off to ⅛ up, May 61⅝@61¾, July 62⅛@62¾, oats unchanged to ⅛ down, rye ¼ to ½ cent decline, and provisions varying from 2 cents setback to 5 cents advance.

Transactions in 20 Days Reach Total of $2,350,000.

The First Federal Savings & Loan Association, in the 20 working days since it opened for business, has cleared more than 6,500 of the investors' accounts transferred to it by the receiver of the Fidelity Building & Loan Association.

Carl H. Ellingson, executive manager of the First Federal, said yesterday: "Claimants are being handled at the rate of 450 a day in the offices of the First Federal. In addition, 550 out-of-town investors at their option have received pay-off checks or share accounts in the new institution through the mails.

"The transactions reached a total of $2,350,000 in savings and investments, leaving a balance of $1,393,000 credited to shareholders who have not yet been interviewed."

Mr. Ellingson predicted that almost all proved claims against the old institution will have been discharged within a few weeks since more than half of the task has been completed.

Seventy per cent of this $2,350,000 in savings has been placed by the investors in accounts in the First Federal Association, it was announced. As in all Federal thrift associations, each investor in the First Federal is protected against loss in his account up to $5,000 through insurance by the Federal Savings & Loan Corporation.

The institution has been receiving savings funds from new patrons at the rate of about $1,500 a day, Mr. Ellingson said.

Failures Rise.

New York, March 28 (AP).—Business failures in the United States for the week ended March 24 rose to 256 from 229 in the previous week, Dun & Bradstreet reported today. A year ago they amounted to 189.

The Market

By Carlton A. Shively.
A Special Correspondent.

Stocks Make Moderate Recovery; U. S. Bonds Uncertain; Franc Lower; Wheat Higher.

New York, March 28.—Stocks closed irregularly higher after falling to new low prices in early trading. The recovery was mild at the best and activity slackened on the rise. Sales were around 1,300,000 shares. United States bonds were uncertain, but rallied. May wheat closed ⅜ of a cent higher at 86⅛ cents a bushel. French currency continued to slide.

While the battle dragged on in Congress over the question of whether dictatorship in this country was to be carried further, a little reminder came as to the unexpected results (to the planners) that may be expected from time to time in the field of economic planning, dictatorship and laissez-faire—for if it is nothing else economic planning as actually practiced in this country turns out to be laissez-faire in the real meaning of the term. It is scarcely conceivable that our crazy-quilt silver purchasing policy, and especially the conduct of our economic and political relations with Mexico had any definite goal. It simply was a case of let 'er ride and trust to luck.

Disillusionment.

It is equally inconceivable that the Mexicans, odd though some of their actions must appear to Anglo-Saxon countries, would have had the audacity to confiscate property right and left and still imagine that the United States Government would provide the munitions for such warfare indefinitely. Yet apparently some one had given them that assurance, or at least had given them no cause to think any adverse action might be taken.

Mexicans were disillusioned when the Treasury announced that it would cease to buy Mexican silver, which it has taken at the rate of 5,000,000 ounces a month, recently at a price of 45 cents an ounce, or approximately that. At the same time the Treasury announced a reduction in its buying rate for silver to 44 cents an ounce, and it is quite likely that further reductions will be made, so that, even if Mexico attempts to peddle its silver in world markets, it will feel directly the effects of the Treasury's action.

Trouble Coming.

It is possible that, faced with loss of her main sources of revenue—first by confiscation of the oil properties, which means that they won't be worked and that sale of reserves above ground to Japan soon will run out; and second, by being forced to take a much reduced price for silver—Mexico will soon collapse economically. In spite of the glowing accounts of life in that utopia where no one works except when he feels like it and where everything is communal, an old-fashioned fighting revolution is likely as not to follow. Out of the mess something may emerge that will be beneficial to this country, but in paying upward of double the value for some 200,000,000 ounces of Mexican silver in the past three years this country has greatly aided the communistic processes, under the guise of "supporting the peso and helping to stabilize Mexican exchange," as an aid to our foreign trade.

Utility Financing.

A revival of the consumer ownership method of financing utility development comes with the decision of a New York State subsidiary of the associated system to offer customers a ten-year 5 per cent note in pieces as small as $100. Electric utilities alone raised nearly two billion dollars in this way during the 1920's, but times have changed since then, and this offering is therefore an experiment. Aside from the damage done to public sentiment by a continuous harassing of utilities in recent years, there is the securities act, which makes an issuer of securities responsible for representations made by selling agents. Most utilities are afraid that their employes, unskilled as security salesmen, might overstate the value of their security and thus get the issues into trouble with the law.

Relief Tax.

The banks heard today that the proposed city relief tax upon clearings had been dropped even more quickly than the proposed tax upon bank balances. The banks, which held a meeting last week at the clearing house, were reported today as being not disposed to chase B. Charney Vladeck, city councilman, "around the stump" until he roosts with a definite idea, at which time the idea will be studied on its merits.

Money Tax.

A Wall Street man inquires if it is merely coincidence that the Vladeck proposal for a tax on bank deposits was made just one day after the appearance of a book written by a former brain truster in which a bank deposit tax was proposed. An outline of a bank deposit tax proposal has been hawking around Washington for a long time, finding high favor with the braintrusters. The "League for Speeding Spending," regardless of how much lip twisting is required to say so, is circulating a book on the money tax proposal and discussions are taking place in the Federal Reserve Board, it is said, and at the Brookings Institution.

Railroad Aid.

Jesse Jones, RFC chairman, is said to be willing henceforth to lend to railroads, deemed deserving of financial assistance, on the basis of "intrinsic value" rather than market value of collateral, which means much, considering the value the market places upon bales of collateral held by many railroads. The only rub is what the I. C. C. may have to say about it. The latest rumor is that, after the President has finished drawing up a railroad program, the I. C. C. won't have much to say about anything.

Curb Exchange.

After dipping into new low ground in the early trading, Curb Exchange stocks recovered sufficiently to show fractional gains for the majority. The increase in the sales which were around the largest of the year, took place because of the activity in the public utility division, where prices held around the poorest in many years on the Electric Bond & Share decision. Low-priced issues, which make up most of the Curb's trading, did not do much either way. High-priced shares continued under pressure, some ranging 2 to 8 points lower. In the group were Chesebrough Manufacturing, Draper, Great A. & P., Mead Johnson, Pepperell, Pittsburgh.

Capital Needed, Not Credit, Says Local Banker

Norman E. Towson Replies to Criticisms of Banks' Lending Policies.

By Thomas M. Cahill.

Criticism of banks lending policies was answered yesterday by Norman E. Towson, assistant treasurer of Washington Loan and Trust Co., in an address before the Newcomers Club at the Carlton Hotel. Speaking on "Financial Developments," Mr. Towson replied to such critics by stating that loans are made out of money left with banks by depositors, to whom such must be immediately repaid on demand and banks cannot, therefore, turn these funds over to others, except on the reasonable certainty of their early repayment.

Showing where the program adopted in this country was designed only to counteract the preceding deflation, and to relieve an unbearable burden of debt, he reminded there has always been the danger that such "reflation" could not be adequately controlled, and that for the last five years, the problems of deficit financing, possibly resulting in uncontrollable inflation, and related matters, have served to disturb bank executives throughout the country.

Under the bank act of 1933, a considerable control of the use of credit was established, but there has been a continuing lack of understanding on the part of the public as to the proper use of bank credit. He said, adding that much criticism has been levelled at bankers because of their unwillingness to lend to indigent borrowers, or borrowers who had only unacceptable security to offer.

"Many times during recent years," the speaker said, "We have been told, often by the same people who advocate the expansion of circulating currency, that what is needed to restore national prosperity is more plentiful credit. We have already discussed the problem of more money in circulation, but, of course, it is realized that money need not circulate if it is replaced by credit.

Credit Is Ample.

"But many of the critics of banks' lending policies seem to be somewhat confused," he continued. "From recent proposals to facilitate access to credit and expositions of the need for doing so, it appears that what people really want is capital. There is ample credit, readily accessible to those entitled to it. Manufacturers and factory distributors are willing to place their goods in the hands of retailers on easy terms; installment sales are being made in considerable volume, and banks are bulging with money with which they are anxious to make sound loans.

"It is realized," Mr. Brown admitted, "that little business grows to be big business only when adequately nourished by fresh capital wherewith to finance expansion. Added equipment, more up-to-date machinery, larger plants, all these things, in the eye of the ambitious business proprietor, are desirable. He desires to see his business grow, and is sure that the ultimate success of his proposed venture is beyond any doubt.

"Banks, however, may not use their funds for speculation on the future of a business enterprise," he emphasized. "The capitalization of industry may only be provided out of savings accumulated by people over the years, when they are willing to place their funds for the long pull in the hope of reward through capital appreciation resulting from the success of the enterprise. But the confusion of speculative capital investments and bank loans for current needs has given rise to the complaint that the small business man cannot borrow other peoples' money as freely as he would wish."

"Finally," he warned, "I would like to point out to you that, whereas for the last five years we, in the banks, and you, in business, have been almost wholly preoccupied with the condition of our domestic economic structure, today we are faced with devastating events beyond the boundaries of our own country. What will be the outcome of these events no one can estimate with any degree of accuracy, but that the contagion against which the President would set up a 'quarantine' may spread, should not be overlooked."

Real Estate Gains.

Charles H. Hillegeist, president of the real estate firm bearing his name, announced yesterday a 33 per cent increase in business done in his office for the first quarter of 1938. As an evidence of increasing confidence on the part of investors in Washington real estate, Mr. Hillegeist explained that most of this increase in his business this year is found in the development and improvement of commercial projects.

In commenting on the prospects for the balance of the year, Mr. Hillegeist stated that there is a large increase in the activity of the commercial real estate department of his own office, and he predicts that the next two years will show a greater increase in number and types of new commercial enterprises in Washington than there has been for the past several years.

The Packard Washington Motor Car Co. will hold a dealers' luncheon at the Hay-Adams House today.

Retail Advertising 18.3% Under Year Ago

Chicago, March 28.—Continuing to reflect the effects of heavy retail sales promotion prior to last year's early Easter, retail display advertising for the week ended March 19 was 18.3 per cent below the corresponding week of last year, according to Advertising Age today.

The report, which tabulates retail display advertising in 80 important cities, shows a total of 19,841,448 lines for the week reported against 24,286,875 lines for the corresponding week of 1937.

Cotton Steady; Trade Buying

New York, March 28 (AP).—Cotton was steady today as trade buying absorbed foreign selling. July, which had sold off from 8.84 to 8.75, closed at 8.78 with final prices 3 points net lower to 2 higher.

The market opened unchanged to 2 points higher in sympathy with steadiness at Liverpool and soon advanced a few points further to the best levels for the day on moderately active trade price-fixing in nearby positions. Increased foreign selling, especially for Bombay and Liverpool account, caused prices to react about 8 or 9 points from the best.

Boston Wool Market.

Boston, March 28 (AP) (U. S. Dept of Agr.).—Trading was very quiet on the Boston wool market today but quotations on domestic wools were steady to fairly firm. The movement of combing quarter blood fleece wools which has recently been a feature of the business on the Boston market has shown signs of slackening. Some of the topmakers who have recently taken orders for quarter blood tops have reported that they are pretty well covered on raw wool and that further interest in wool awaits new orders on tops.

Bob Burns Says—

Pret' near any job would be a lot easier if a fella'd just think about what he's tryin' to accomplish instead of how much work he's doing. The reason an old man can walk 5 miles around a golf course is because he keeps thinkin' about what he's gonna do to that ball when he gets to it. If he had to get out and walk 5 miles down a good paved highway, it would probably kill him.

I know an old man who ran an elevator for 35 years. Finally one day he went to the boss and he says: "I'm quittin'—the elevator inspector told me today that that thing weighs 4,000 pounds and that's too heavy a load for an old man like me to be liftin'."

Salary Publicity

Should salaries over $15,000 a year paid by corporations be made public by the Government? President Roosevelt went on record early this month as strongly in favor of revealing salaries, but what does public opinion have to say on this matter? Read the Gallup Poll in WEDNESDAY'S POST.

Plot Is Charged To Take $5,000 From Hysong's

Note Writer Held, Alleged to Have Asked Pay for Stolen Books.

Charged with attempting to extort $5,000 from Martin W. Hysong, local undertaker, Oscar A. Mark, 36, 2100 block of O street northwest, was held at the Sixth Precinct station last night for arraignment in Police Court today.

The charge was placed against Mark after Attorney E. Edward O'Connel served a writ of habeas corpus on police.

Mark was taken into custody Thursday as he left the Hysong funeral home after allegedly demanding that Hysong turn over a large sum of money to him. Lieut. Joseph W. Shimon, who is reported to have heard Mark's demand, took him into custody.

Books Taken in Burglary.

The suspect admitted to police he had presented Hysong with a letter asking $5,000 for return of records of operation of the undertaking establishment. The records, books listing $30,000 in accounts receivable, were taken from Hysong's several months ago when the place was burglarized.

Mark told Shimon and members of the Pickup squad that a note, written by an unidentified person, was shoved under the door of his home a month ago. The note, Mark stated, instructed him to go to Hysong and collect the extortion sum and the accounting books would be returned. Mark declared the sender of the letter promised him $100 to act as "go between."

Newspaper Ad Used.

In the note, Mark told detectives, there were instructions for him to rewrite the letter to be given to Hysong in his own handwriting.

Hysong called police and told them he had been given a code of letters which he was to use in a daily newspaper to communicate with the extortionist. Police arranged for him to insert the advertisement and Mark was arrested when he appeared at the undertaker's office.

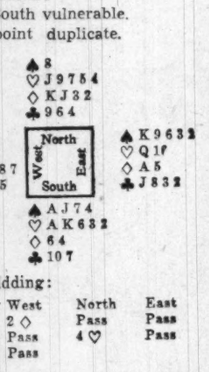
Mark denies having any knowledge of the person who sent him the note.

Contract

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson

The implications of an opponent's bid are vitally important to the player who ends up as declarer. Obviously, however, unless one is familiar with the bidding style of a particular opponent, it is difficult to make the proper deductions from his bids. It is for that reason that experts spend so much time appraising their opponents. Consider the "guess" which the declarer had to make in the following hand:

South, dealer.
North-South vulnerable.
Match-point duplicate.



The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	2 ◇	Pass	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	4 ♡	Pass
Pass	Pass

South, it will be noted, opened with one spade rather than one heart, for purposes of "preparedness." His hand was far from strong and if he were to bid a heart first and partner were to respond with either two clubs, two diamonds or one notrump, South would be at a loss for a good rebid. He could not show his spade suit without the risk of reaching at least the three level in cass North preferred hearts. North considered doubling two diamonds but wisely decided against it, since even with his singleton spade there was no assurance of defeating contract. His raise of partner's heart bid from two to four was too strong. A single raise was all that his hand warranted.

West opened the king of clubs, followed with the queen and the ace. Declarer ruffed and drew the outstanding trumps. Now success or failure depended squarely on declarer's guess of the diamond suit. He led the six toward dummy, praying that West would relieve his indecision by putting up the ace. But there was no such luck. West followed with the seven-spot.

I fear that the impulse of many players would be to go right up with dummy's king on the assumption that West must have the ace to justify his overcall. The declarer, however, did not take this view of the matter. He reflected that West had shown the ace, king and queen of clubs and a singleton heart. Surely, he reasoned, if West had had the diamond ace also he would not have contented himself, particularly when not vulnerable, with a mere two diamond overcall. Either he would have made a takeout double, or he would have found a rebid after South's two-heart bid. The fact that he had not done either of these and that he had not doubled the final contract seemed sufficient proof that he could not hold the diamond ace. On this sound reasoning declarer put in dummy's jack, and by so doing fulfilled the contract.

Add Wrath department: Those Washington taxicab drivers who erect portable stumps to squawk about the "great uncertainty" the National Park Service people placed on the cherry blossoms this season . . . They cry that so many different official reports were issued about the probable time the trees would bloom that the taxicab business suffered in consequence . . . The drivers allege from their portable stumps that the country-at-large is still a little in doubt about whether the trees are in bloom; that if one definite announcement had been made the crowds in Washington (and the taxicab business) would be much larger . . . From our stationary stump we say, on behalf of the Park Service spokesmen, that no one knows to the minute when the trees will bloom . . . It's entirely a matter of weather . . .

And before quitting the subject of spring, a word should be said in extenuation of Toni Eyle (ICC), the poet, who recently sang "'tis not yet spring," to be challenged by us who claimed that the spring is here. We hear from the poet, as follows:

"The poem was writ during the first week of March—remember? 'Twas bleak, rainy, misty and dim, with nary a ray of sunshine for nigh ten days. Thus do I exonerate myself from your quite justifiable reproof—and were I to writ anew, would extoil lustily the delights and virtues of a premature spring . . ."

Go to it. And should you take a stroll through Rock Creek Park right now you will find the preparate earth overtoned with the dead leaves of the last fall; while overhead, the trees are touched with the feathery green of a new spring. That ought to get you, Toni; in fact, should strike some vibrant theme ing your teeming soul! There's a poem for you in that death on the ground and life overhead . . .

Those Government hikers, who walk the mountains for pastime, have a question to ask that could be answered by R. C. Bowker, of the Bureau of Standards . . . He knows to the nth degree the essential characteristics of a serviceable shoe; whether the welt shoe is more durable than the stitchdown; whether the cement shoe holds its shape as well as the McKay shoe; whether fiber counters and toes are as durable as those made from leather . . . He works over an abrasion machine which answers these questions and many others hikers have pondered . . . Comes now to hand another Federal employe publication, which we properly salute and describe as follows:

The name is The Whappawus . . . It is designed to serve workers in WPA, PWA and USHA, that is, those workers who belong to A. F. G. E. Lodge 123 . . . Godfrey V. Wickware, executive assistant to Charles I. Stengle, is the godfather of the sheet, which will appear once a month . . .

Stirring words, these, as spoken by Harold P. Thoreson, national president, Association of Nonclassified Federal Employes, at a meeting the other night: "Any organization or group including both the Federal unions, who take a flat-footed stand that the entire reorganization bill should be defeated, are simply crucifying the only hope of the 325,000 nonclasified employes of the country who are striving for a civil service status through noncompetitive examination. The opponents of the entire bill's plan are not true believers in a merit system for if they were they would not oppose these sections of the bill which make possible a status through noncompetitive examination . . ."

The association is pushing sections 206 and 207 of S-3331, and sections 301, 302 and 303 of H. R. 8277, which provide noncompetitive examinations for emergency workers as a means of acquiring status . . .

Appeals Court Upholds Farley In Lottery Ban

'Fraud' Order Is Backed Against Contest for Selecting Charities.

The United States Court of Appeals yesterday upheld the right of Postmaster General Farley to issue a fraud order against the National Conference on Legalizing Lotteries, Inc., on the ground that "guessing contests have been held to be within the ban of the statute."

The conference had sought an injunction to restrain the Postoffice Department from seizing its mail and returning it to the senders marked "fraudulent." District Court dismissed the suit, and the appeal was taken.

The appellate court opinion was written by Chief Justice D. Lawrence Groner.

The opinion recited that the conference issued a list of 16 charitable, religious, and philanthropical groups and the subscriber was to pick the list of the most deserving organizations. Those who most nearly approximated the group picked by the judges would get $20,000; second prize was $10,000. Altogether there were 285 prizes.
